Rebels Open Artillery Fire Upon Madrid; Citizens Flee

'Zero Hour' Has Arrived, Insurgents Apparently Have Decided.

Offensive Follows 24-Hour Air Attack

Planes Drop Incendiary Bombs on Loyalists; Houses Fired.

By the United Press.

Madrid, Nov. 4.—The rebels tonight opened artillery fire on Madrid while infantry advanced almost to the borders of the capital.

Attacking with artillery, tanks and bombing planes, the rebels apparently have decided that the "zero hour" to invade Madrid has arrived.

Shells began to fall in the city at 9:20 p. m. (4:20 p. m., Eastern standard time). They created panic among a people whose nerves already are at the breaking point after nearly a week of rebel bombing from the air.

[Reports at Lisbon, Portugal, said Madrid citizens were fleeing toward Valencia, according to the Associated Press.—Editor's note.]

The shelling was preceded by a drive which brought the rebel attackers nearly to the edge of the city.

Drop Incendiary Bombs.

For several days the rebels have been close enough to throw shells into Madrid, but have not done so. Apparently, they hoped the mere threat of shelling and the bombing they have done would impel the loyalists to surrender.

The attack tonight indicated to observers that the rebels now have become convinced that the city will not be surrendered, without fighting, and are prepared to wage a major battle for it.

The big offensive began at dawn after heavy artillery and air bombardment lasting more than 24 hours. All night long shells and a hail of lead from rifles and machine guns rained on loyalist positions. Government militiamen replied spiritedly.

At dawn insurgent trench mortars opened fire, adding to the intensity of the bombardment. Then at 8 a. m. three rebel tri-motor bombers roared over loyalist lines dropping incendiary bombs. Houses caught fire and billows of smoke masked the merciless machine gun and trench mortar fire lashing the loyalists' front lines.

12 Foreign Tanks.

Black rebel bombers constantly bombed the Hill of the Angels and the Aranguez road, seeking loyalists batteries in Getafe and Alcorcon. Apparently the batteries were located, for by the middle of the afternoon they were silent.

Retreating loyalists said they counted 12 fast tanks of foreign make charging over the fields toward Getafe as they left.

In Madrid alarm sirens and anti-aircraft guns warned of death from the air.

Meanwhile, the Socialist government was shaken up to include four Syndicalist ministers.

Soviet Is Exonerated.

London, Nov. 4 (U.P.).—The Spanish nonintervention committee tonight exonerated Soviet Russia of virtually all German charges that it had broken its compact by sending munitions to the Spanish loyalists.

Vienna Shift Gives Otto Throne Hopes

Vienna, Nov. 4 (AP).—A cabinet shift tonight raised monarchists' hopes for restoration of Archduke Otto to the former Hapsburg throne in Austria.

It was possible, informed sources said, that a plebiscite might be held to call Otto back as Emperor. The Archduke will be 24 years old next month.

Monarchists pinned hopes on belief none of the five new cabinet ministers would oppose restoration of the throne.

The ministers are Field Marshal-Lieut Ludwig Huelgerth, vice chancellor; Rudolf Neumaier, finance; Dr. Wilhelm Taucher, commerce; Udo Neustaedter-Stuermer, security, and Dr. Atols Pilz, justice.

Dropped from the cabinet of Chancellor Kurt von Schuschnigg were three Heimwehr ministers, Eduard Baar-Baarenfels, Dr. Ludwig Braxler, and Fritz Stockinger. The former minister of justice, Hans Hammerstein-Equord, also was ousted.

Informed observers saw in the cabinet changes an effort by Schuschnigg to win the favor of Italy and Germany, as the ministers represented interests of each nation.

9-Inch Snow Disrupts Traffic in Cincinnati

Cincinnati, Nov. 4 (AP).—An all-day driving snowstorm swept through this tri-State area today, leaving a record early season fall of 9 inches in Cincinnati, disrupting traffic, telegraph and light service.

The storm at times gained intensity reminiscent of last Christmas Day's blizzard and reached well to the west of Louisville, Ky., through Indiana where rivers rose in its wake and north to Columbus, Ohio.

Let's Give the President A Real Welcome!

AT SOME HOUR tomorrow, the President of the United States returns to the community in which he has lived for the past four years and in which he will live for the next four years.

AS CHIEF EXECUTIVE of the country, he is, through his appointments, the chief executive of this city.

THE WASHINGTON POST respectfully suggests that the people of Washington should greet Franklin D. Roosevelt in a manner deserving a man who has won a great victory and is now returning to his home.

WE WOULD like to see his car tomorrow cover the distance between the Capitol and the White House between throngs of citizens lining Pennsylvania Avenue.

WE WOULD like to hear thunderous cheers.

WE WOULD like to see a marching escort of men and bands.

WE WOULD like to see the Avenue appropriately decorated and men and women shouting their greeting from the windows.

WE WOULD like to see Government workers and non-Government workers allowed sufficient time from their duties to share in the demonstration.

THE TIME is short. But with the co-operation of all and under able leadership, it can be done.

IF COMMISSIONER ALLEN . . . whose ability for the quick organization of similar projects has been proved before . . . should consent, we would like to see him undertake the chairmanship of a committee of citizens representing the various interests of the community to make the necessary plans and arrangements.

WE FEEL certain that the community would fall in behind any plan that such a committee might suggest.

WHAT about it, Mr. Allen?

WHAT about it, Washington?

Joy, Grief Mix As Ballot Bets Are Collected

Allen Wins All His Wagers; Doctor Loses $5,000; Wheelbarrow Busy.

A lot of grief was mixed with the rejoicing yesterday as pay-off day on the election rolled around.

Commissioner George Allen, one of the town's most rabid Roosevelt supporters, collected no less than 28 bets on any or every phase of the election. He wagered on his conviction that Landon would not carry more than two States. Needless to say the payers were not jubilant.

Arthur Block, contractor, of 3800 Fourteenth street northwest, was a conservative compared to Allen. He conceded Landon three States on a sign he painted and hung up Monday on the window of the Storm & Sherwood Restaurant at 2005 Fourteenth street, where he eats lunch every day.

While Allen was operating with the Gallup poll and his own sampling methods, Block was estimating the avalanche by a somewhat unscientific method. He said:

"Well, I didn't think the people would turn Roosevelt around that way after what Hoover did. I figured all the working people in the cities like Detroit were for him and the mining people in towns like those in West Virginia. They would be for him, too. And also New England and places like that."

Politico Block said he won $25 on his confidence in Roosevelt and regretted he had been sick a long time, which prevented his having more to bet. "Besides," he added, "I wasn't just sure he was going to win."

One traditional aftermath of an election which made its appearance true to form was the ride in a wheelbarrow, with the victor grinning back over his shoulder at a sweating loser doing the pushing.

The crowds smiled with amusement as John Granadas pushed Delmus Warren along F street from Seventh to the White House, with a billy goat leading the little entourage.

Among those who followed the goatcade from its starting point at Seventh and F streets, to the White House and back to Thirteenth and E streets were Louise Olivetto, Sue Deckard and Frances Campbell, all of whom were present when the bet was made and wanted to be in on the payoff.

Heaviest loser in town was believed to be a doctor who wagered $5,000 even money on Landon. His name is withheld at his request.

While no one in Washington had the right to vote, everyone apparently knew that Roosevelt was going to win and had an explanation of why ready for those who would listen. It was a field day for the "I told you so's."

Abe Milloff, 300-pound peanut vendor who hawks his wares at Fifteenth street and E, summed it up this way:

"Roosvelt won because he deserved to win."

James Beach, patrolman on Pennsylvania avenue, said:

"I was instructed at headquarters this morning to be on the

Four Accused Of Peonage in Florida Camp

Two Laborers Tell Agents of F.B.I. They Were Held Forcibly at Job.

How two colored laborers were held in a state of peonage by their employers in a turpentine camp deep in the swampy forests of Florida was revealed last night by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Charged with the crime, operators of the turpentine still and their helpers, "woods riders" in the low country, were arraigned before a United States Commissioner in Jacksonville yesterday afternoon, and held under $1,000 bond each.

The prisoners, J. Edgar Hoover, director of the F. B. I., announced last night, are Will Knabb, Earl Knabb, Fred Jones and Edward Hall, all of Macclenny, Fla.

The Knabbs are operators of the still and Jones and Hall "riders," who are charged with having assisted in the intimidation of Arthur Smith and Ed Baker.

On October 14, Smith and Baker tried to leave the employ of the Knabbs and go with another firm, the F. B. I. announced. They were threatened by the Knabbs and Jones, who exhibited guns. Then their prospective new employer offered to settle what indebtedness they had incurred with the Knabbs, and this was refused.

A week later the two men left the turpentine camp to see a prospective employer at Baldwin, Fla.

But deep in the swamps they were overtaken by Hall, another "woods rider" for the Knabbs, the Department Justice charges. He bandished his shotgun and forced the two terrified men to return.

Complaint against the four prisoners was filed in Jacksonville yesterday. The Knabbs and their "woods runners" were arrested by agents of the F. B. I. and taken before the commissioner.

Date of their trial will be announced later.

Town Votes Bonds, Gives Crippled Girl A Chance to Walk

Jackson, Ohio, Nov. 4 (AP).—To 7-year-old Betty McGhee, today's tabulation of election returns means that she may walk again.

Her toddling baby feet led her five years ago into a heap of smoldering ashes left by road workers in the garden of her home. The burns left her crippled. She was awarded damages, but the township had no money to pay.

Betty's father died in October, 1935, and since then her mother, on relief, has struggled to care for the crippled girl and three other small children.

Now township voters have approved overwhelmingly a $14,000 bond issue to pay off the court judgment and provide money for surgery that may save her from life as a hopeless cripple.

Roosevelt's Grandchild Is Christened

President Sees James' Daughter, 8 Months, Receive Blessing.

Plans to Return To D. C. Tonight

Cheered as Thousands Wire Congratulations on His Victory.

By the Associated Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Nov. 4.—Jubilant over the record vote given him in yesterday's balloting, President Roosevelt spent most of his time today reading thousands of congratulatory telegrams and, with his family about him, proudly watching the christening of his downy-haired 8-month-old granddaughter, Kate.

The messages came from all corners of the country. Senders ranged from children to the aged and infirm. Many had a religious tone, according to Marvin H. McIntyre, a Presidential secretary, who received some laudatory telegrams himself.

The President early tonight issued a statement of thanks for the messages. It said:

"I find myself nearly buried by an avalanche of thousands of letters and telegrams. It is heartening to have this additional assurance that we are going forward together, I would like to thank each of you individually for your confidence and pledges of loyal support. Will each of you accept this as my acknowledgment and my thanks for your message?"

Will Return to Capital.

The President will leave here late tomorrow night for Washington, there to remain about a week before starting a two week's vacation cruise in Southern waters.

While House officials indicated a few important Presidential appointments may be announced before the Southern trip begins.

Whether these would include any new Cabinet selections was not known. There has been authoritative hints that at least two or three new Cabinet nominations will be made, one to fill permanently the War Secretaryship now held temporarily by Harry H. Woodring, of Kansas.

Vacancies to Be Filled.

Other major appointments—to fill vacancies—will include those of Assistant Secretaries of Navy and Labor, Undersecretaries of State and Treasury, Comptroller General, a member of the Federal Reserve Board of Governors, a high commissioner to the Philippines and a commissioner of reclamation.

There have been reports that Harry L. Hopkins, works progress administrator, might resign, and that Rexford G. Tugwell, on professorial leave from Columbia University, may be shifted from the Resettlement Administration.

Neither of these could be confirmed here.

The maritime strike is expected to receive most of the President's attention when he returns to Washington. Aids said he was leaving the matter thus far etnirely up to his maritime commission. A conference with its members was regarded as likely the latter part of the week.

Takes Place in Home.

The quiet little christening ceremony that followed the election fanfare took place just before tea, in the candle-lit drawing room of the big stone and stucco house overlooking the Hudson.

While the Nation's interest centered on the re-elected President, little Kate, the only dark-haired baby in his family, had his undivided attention.

Kate, the 20-pound daughter of James and Betsy Cushing Roosevelt, behaved well in her role as leading lady on this important day. She wiggled her toes, under her long, tucked and lace-trimmed dress of French lawn, but made no sound during the ceremony.

As the Rev. Frank Wilson, rector of St. James Episcopal Chapel at Hyde Park, where the President was christened, touched her forehead with water, she raised a plump hand to the rector's face, and was kissed in return.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, in a maroon cloth dress, and the President's 82-year-old mother, Mrs. James Roosevelt, sr., stood near the improvised altar—a lace-covered table with two bowls of roses on it, and two tall silver candlesticks.

Democrats Gain Record Margin In U. S. Senate

G. O. P. Ranks May Shrink 17; Lodge Gains Seat Once Held by Kin.

By Robert C. Albright.

The Republican Party's tottering garrison in the Senate last night dwindled to 17 or 18, a net loss of 4 or 5 seats, as the Democratic invasion rolled up the largest Senate majority for that party in the history of this Government.

With an indicated Democratic total of 74 or 75 Senators, a majority of nearly four-fifths, Senate attaches yesterday already were making arrangements to run a "Cherokee strip" down the minority side of the Senate chamber to take care of overflow Democrats.

Democratic gains of seats in six States were offset only by apparent losses in only one or two, on the basis of still incomplete return. Five outspoken critics of New Deal policies, including Senator L. J. Dickinson, of Iowa, and Daniel O. Hastings, of Delaware, appeared to have been displaced.

Little Reorganization.

Despite this unwieldy Senate majority, which insured swift upper chamber approval of major Administration measures, only slight reorganization appeared likely in the Senate's legislative machine.

The entire Democratic leadership was returned to the Senate, together with chairmen of all major committees. Rather than general committee realignments as result of the shifts, it was said that new Democrats probably will be named to the posts vacated by defeated Republicans.

Party colors of the 96 Senators in the Seventy-fifth Congress may be divided as follows: Democrats, 74; Republicans, 18; Farmer-Laborites, 2; Progressive, 1, and Independent, 1. This compares with 70 Democrats, 23 Republicans, 2 Farmer-Laborites and 1 Progressive in the Seventy-fourth Congress.

As the outcome of the senatorial race in South Dakota remained uncertain, Democrats faced the possibility of holding still another seat by re-electing Senator W. J. Bulow. If Bulow pulls through, Democrats will have a majority of 75, and Republicans a minority of only 17 seats. Bulow was slightly ahead in last night's tallying.

Col. Edwin A. Halsey, secretary of the Senate, who crowded surplus Senate Democrats on one side of the Senate chamber following the 1932 election, rather than partition the Republican side, admitted last night he could find no more room there for the additional influx. Halsey said a small "Cherokee strip" will be formed on the Republican side. Republican Senators will be given the first choice of seats on the minority side, and "freshman" Democrats will be assigned what is left over.

With but one possible exception, major committees of the Senate

Market Booms In Post-Ballot Buying Spurt

Industrial Stocks Rise to Record High; Utilities Register Drop.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 4.—A post-election scramble to buy industrial shares and commodities hoisted prices along a broad front in Wall Street today and sent many soaring to new peaks since 1930 or 1931.

The sweep and vigor of the rise echoed the big bull markets in early days of the New Deal program to raise prices as a stepping-stone to business revival.

Utilities Slump.

Striking cross currents in the stock market were accepted by financial observers as evidence of efforts by shareholders and traders to appraise the business significance of the Democratic victory.

Copper, steel, motor, retail, farm implements and miscellaneous shares—all groups notable for profit gains in the latest stages of business recovery—boomed in the heaviest dealings since last February. Many finished $1 to $4 a share higher.

In contrast utility shares dropped a few cents to more than $2 a share and rails moved sluggishly. Brokers looked to the New Deal program for Government development of large-scale power projects and pressure for lower rates for explanation in part of liquidation in the group.

Aided mainly by a new recovery peak for industrials, the Associated Press average price of 60 stocks rose 70 cents to duplicate the recent recovery record of $71.70, registered October 17, and the highest since April 21, 1931. The average of 30 industrial issues alone ad-

New Deal Wins Record Total Of House Seats

Number May Go Past 330; Republican Veterans Are Defeated.

By Felix Bruner.

With returns nearly complete, the Democratic majority in the new House of Representatives last night had broken all previous records.

A total of 426 of the country's 435 Congressional districts elected 327 Democrats, 89 Republicans, 7 Progressives and 3 Farmer-Laborites. The Democrats were expected to pick up a majority of the nine districts from which returns have not been received, thus giving them a total membership of between 330 and 335, and the Republicans slightly more than 90.

At the beginning of the last Congress the Democratic membership of the House was 321, but this was reduced to 308 by deaths and resignations. The Republicans at the beginning of the last Congress had 104 members of the House.

Several veteran Republican Representatives went down in the landslide. Among them was Chester C. Bolton, chairman of the Republican Congressional campaign committee, who two days before election predicted the Republicans would gain a majority in the new House.

Bolton was defeated by Anthony A. Fleger, Democrat, who had the indorsement of the Townsend and Coughlin organizations. The Coughlin influence was plainly to be seen in Ohio, where some of the major Republican losses occurred. Other Democratic gains included seats in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Michigan and California.

Another veteran Ohioan defeated was Representative John G. Cooper, who represented the Nineteenth District of that State for 22 years.

Landslide for President Carries Party Tickets Throughout Land.

Maine, Vermont Support Kansan

Inroads in Republican Strongholds Affect Governorships.

By Franklyn Waltman.

Leaving the Republican Party paralyzed, without leaders or issues, President Roosevelt in his unprecedented victory of Tuesday not only carried all except two States, but also carried into office with him increased Democratic majorities in House and Senate.

In the wake of this Roosevelt landslide came an upsurge in the stock and commodity markets, reminiscent of the early days of the New Deal; claims of labor leaders that they were responsible for the President's victory; speculation over the future course of the New Deal and possible Cabinet changes; jubilation among Democrats the Nation over and widespread demoralization among the beaten Republicans.

The Roosevelt tidal wave not only washed to victory Democratic Governors, Senators and Representatives believed destined for defeat, but it also brought to a halt the political careers of a number of well-known Republicans, several of them public figures of years' standing.

With the returns incomplete in some States, President Roosevelt piled up an excess of 26,000,000 votes as against approximately 16,500,000 for his Republican opponent, Gov. Alf M. Landon, of Kansas. On the basis of these incomplete returns the President received 61 per cent of the major party vote and he had 523 electoral votes in his column, leaving only Maine and Vermont, with 8 electoral votes, in the Landon column.

4 Republicans Unseated.

The already top-heavy Democratic majority in the Senate was increased by at least four new members who unseated Republicans—possibly by five when the contest in South Dakota is settled. There Senator William J. Bulow, Democrat, was barely ahead of his Republican opponent, Chandler Gurney.

Thus the complexion of the new Senate will be 74 or 75 Democrats, 17 or 18 Republicans, two Farmer-Laborites, one Progressive and one Independent. Not since the Civil War has the Republican membership of the Senate been so low.

In the House, where Republicans most pessimistic over Gov. Landon's chances expected to gain 50 or 60 seats, the Democrats not only held their lines but seemed destined to elect from 5 to 10 more of their number than they did two years ago. In that year 322 Democratic House members were elected. Early this morning the Democrats had won 327 of the House seats, the Republicans 89, the Farmer-Laborites 3 and 9 remained in doubt. In 1890 the Republicans elected only 88 House members—but that number represented a much larger proportion of the House then than will the prospective Republican membership in the next House.

One Victory for G. O. P.

Although the Republicans were confident they would recapture three or four State capitols from Democratic hands, irrespective of the outcome of the Presidential contest, they apparently unseated only one incumbent Democratic Governor.

That was in South Dakota, where Leslie Jensen defeated Gov. Tom Berry. In all other instances incumbent Democratic Governors last night were leading their Republican opponents. In Kansas a Democrat, Walter Huxman, was elected to succeed Gov. Landon.

Richard G. McMullen, Democrat, also was elected Governor of the Accuracy of Gallup Poll, Carried in The Post, Stirs Comment of Political, Business Leaders

Startled by the accuracy of the American Institute of Public Opinion poll, business and political leaders throughout the country yesterday sent congratulatory comments to The Post, which has been printing the results of the poll weekly. Some of the comments follow:

H. A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture—"On January 5, 1936, the Gallup poll published the vote by States on the AAA. This analysis seemed so fair that I had a conference with Dr. Gallup to learn about his methods. He impressed me as honest in purpose and scientific in method. It became obvious, however, after the September Maine election and the Baltimore Sun Maryland poll, that in his system of weighting he had not allowed sufficiently for the underprivileged group. His short-time swing on a particular State, or for a particular group within a State, may occasionally be in error because of the small samples involved. While I have had a little skepticism as to his short-time swings and his measurements of public sentiment on particular problems, I have felt that Gallup has done by far the best job of any nonpolitical person in measuring public opinion. I sincerely hope he continues to improve his technique not merely with regard to political elections, but also with respect to determining in particular classes of society the attitude on problems of the day which bear on the general welfare. I expected Gallup to do what he has done in this election and I congratulate him and the newspapers behind him on their success."

Gallup's success, which appears uncanny to some, is no surprise to him. He knew all along that he was right and staked his reputation on his ability.

Gallup, who is only 35 years old, has had a Horatio Alger career. Born on an Iowa farm. At 12 he was delivering milk. As a youth he went to Iowa State University with only a few dollars in his pocket.

He became editor of his college paper and made

Bill to Legalize 'Mercy Deaths' Put Before English Parliament

By the Associated Press.

London, Nov. 4.—A "mercy death" bill to permit medical men to kill incurable patients was introduced in Parliament today.

It was presented by Lord Ponsonby, climaxing a year's campaign by many medical and church leaders for euthanasia—their term for "easy death."

It would enable physicians and surgeons legally to put to death patients suffering great pain from conditions diagnosed as hopeless.

For almost a year there has been a growing sentiment in England for and against "mercy deaths." Advocates have included some of the highest medical authorities of the realm, who organized a "euthanasia society."

Reaction was more sharply divided over the London Daily Mail's account, on November 7, 1935, of a physician's "confession" of five "mercy deaths."

The newspaper, which described the doctor as "a kindly faced, elderly family doctor," said he told of having put to death a newly born baby "doomed to imbecility," and four adults suffering incurable diseases.

Havelock Ellis is a staunch advocate of euthanasia, as are such prominent medical men as Sir George Buchanan, Sir Leonard Hill, Sir Walter Langdon Brown, and Sir Frederick Menzies.

The strongest opposition came from high Roman Catholic churchmen.

Roosevelt Vote At 25,000,000; 46 States Won

Kansan Polls 16,000,000 as Democratic Slates Are Swept in.

DuPont and traditionally Republican State of Delaware. Frank Murphy, Democrat, succeeds a Republican Governor in Michigan. Including three hold-over Governors in California, Maryland and New Jersey, the prospect is that only eight of the 48 States will have Republicans as Chief Executives, compared with nine at present.

So great and impressive was the President's victory that even those who had opposed his re-election accepted the verdict of the Nation without criticism.. In Wall Street the election result was hailed with a vigorous buying movement in industrial stocks and commodities. Shares went up from $1 to $5 or more and in some cases the highest prices for the last five years were recorded.. Wheat advanced 1 cent a bushel at Chicago and cotton $1 a bale in New York. Prices of public utility stocks and some bonds, however, displayed weakness.

Even those who assailed the President most severely in the campaign were ready to let bygones be bygones or remained silent. Al Smith, Democratic standard bearer in 1929 who bolted his party for Gov. Landon, told the Associated Press in New York that "every citizen, every real American, must put his shoulder to the wheel and stand behind the President."

Speculation over the program of the Roosevelt Administration's second term—whether the President would turn to the right or the left; whether he would undertake to revive the NRA; what he would do should the Supreme Court invalidate the Labor Relations and the Social Security Acts—shared attention with speculation over possible changes the President may make in his official family.

Cabinet Changes Likely.

It was learned authoritatively from a high Democratic leader some days ago that with the exception of Secretary of State Cordell Hull, Secretary of the Treasurer Henry Morgenthau and Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, the President proposes to have an entirely new Cabinet in his second Administration.

Since that statement was made, Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes has placed the President under obligations to him by his strenuous activities in the campaign and he may also be retained in the new Cabinet. It is also possible Secretary of the Navy Claude Swanson may remain.

But the other five Cabinet officers are expected to be replaced, sometime next year. The position of Secretary of War really is vacant now, since Harry Wooding holds only a temporary appointment. Postmaster General James A. Farley is on furlough and although he will come back into the Cabinet later this week, he does not wish to remain beyond January 1.

Attorney General Homer S. Cummings may be appointed American high commissioner to the Philippine Islands, succeeding Frank Murphy, elected Governor of Michigan, and Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper is understood to be anxious to return to private life. A new post may be found for Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins.

Claims of Influence.

But whatever the President may do about policies and personnel, he found spokesmen for two special groups knocking at his door yesterday with assertions that they were responsible for his election. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace held the election to be an indorsement of Administration farm plans and a mandate for all speed on the enactment of an all-risk crop insurance program.

Two labor leaders—men who will be influential in the Roosevelt councils of the next few years—in effect interpreted the President's victory as "labor's victory." John L Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, in a message to his field representatives, asserted that "labor has re-elected Roosevelt."

He added that "unorganized labor has followed the leadership of organized labor" and that both fell in behind the trail blazed by the United Mine Workers last February when the organization gave a "ringing indorsement" to President Roosevelt. He interpreted the election as "a rebuke to the insolence and arrogance of organized wealth."

"Its avarice and rapacity have been checked and must be further restrained in the interest of the people," he asserted. "The workers of the country must organize themselves to consolidate their political victory and translate it into material benefits and reforms.

Berry Cites Support.

George L. Berry, president of Labor's Non-Partisan League, asserted the election result would be recorded in history as "labor's victory," adding that "the almost 100 per cent support of organized labor and its sympathizers behind President Roosevelt" served "to stimulate the rank and file of all workers, organized and unorganized."

He maintained that Labor's Non-Partisan League "held the balance of power" in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska and Wyoming.

Meanwhile President Roosevelt at Hyde Park literally was buried under an avalanche of congratulatory messages as he set about preparations to return to Washington tomorrow in order to dispose of urgent business before going on a vacation cruise

Mr. Roosevelt last night issued a statement of thanks for the "additional assurance that we are going forward together," which came from his friends and admirers. He asked that his statement be accepted by each of those who sent him congratulations as an acknowledgment of his thanks.

Downcast by the sweep of the Roosevelt victory, Republican chieftains spent the day surveying the destruction and havoc visited on their party. Their gloom was without even the consolations that the politically defeated usually find. Look where they might, the Republican chieftains found nothing but Democratic success, except in two places.

In Massachusetts, 34-year-old Republican Henry Cabot Lodge, jr., had won a notable victory over Gov. James M. Curley for the Senate. In South Dakota was the Jensen victory. In 1932 and 1934 the Republicans believed they had reached the bottom of their unpopularity—but the dregs of the bitter cup of defeat had not been touched until this week.

Only these two victories stood out to cheer them, and they constituted small cheer in the completeness of the Republican defeat—with their Presidential candidate suffering the worst beating ever given a major party candidate for the Presidency; with their numbers on Capitol Hill reduced to the smallest figure in a generation, and with 40 of the State Capitols in the hands of the Democrats or left-wing parties sympathetic to the President.

Unless it be the youthful Lodge from Massachusetts, grandson of a former Senator and bearer of a name respected in Republican circles, no Republican emerged from this campaign in a position to claim any consideration from the party in 1940. Certainly Gov. Landon stands no chance of renomination four years from now.

Roosevelt Accorded Greatest Vote of Confidence Since Beginning of Country.

By Franklyn Waltman.

NOT since George Washington—excepting the freakish Monroe election—has any President of the United States been given the vote of confidence which this country gave to President Roosevelt. Not since the Father of His Country made his Farewell Address has there been such national unity behind the Chief Executive as was demonstrated in the re-election of Mr. Roosevelt.

WALTMAN.

The voice of the people expressed in collective action may not be the Voice of God, but in a democracy, once the voice of the people has been fairly expressed, it constitutes a mandate that the will of the people be done, especially when the people as unmistakably make clear their desires as they did Tuesday.

Various interpretations undoubtedly will be placed on the desires of the people thus expressed and what President Roosevelt has been given a mandate to do. Each interpretation will depend in large part on the chief interest and viewpoint of the interpreter. Thus one may contend that the President has been given a mandate to engage in further monetary experimentation. Another may regard the election result as a mandate for further efforts at planned economy.

But these are the special pleaders for causes, good or bad. They do not represent the people as a whole, nor do they explain what actuated an overwhelming majority to mark their ballots for President Roosevelt. It is doubtful if there is a man or woman in the country who would approve everything done in the name of the New Deal. In fact, Mr. Roosevelt today disapproves of some of the things he did or attempted to do during the last three and a half years.

Thus, it becomes a reasonable assumption that the collective voters of this country were not thinking in terms of specific things or policies when they joined in placing a new mandate on President Roosevelt. It is reasonable to assume that they were thinking in generalities—as the President had spoken to them.

They were thinking in terms of broad, general principles; of a way of life, if you please. Franklin Delano Roosevelt represented to them a people's President, a man who had their welfare at heart and one who stood between them and those ready to exploit them, between them and those callous and indifferent to the general welfare.

Thus they indorsed the spirit of the New Deal, rather than specific policies. They gave to the President a mandate to continue his opposition to that group termed by the President "economic royalists;" to continue his efforts to increase opportunity for the average man and woman; briefly, to continue his efforts for a redistribution of general welfare. They left to the President the determination of the methods he should employ, irrespective of whether his actions be termed turning to the right or to the left.

Thus, Mr. Roosevelt has been named the Nation's trustee in a very real sense of the word to promote a redistribution of the general welfare, and whatever proposals he hereafter makes for the attainment of that objective deserve to be considered primarily with the end in mind, considered without prejudices, partisanship or blind devotion to tradition.

Honest and sincere conservatives who have found objectionable not only the details of some of Mr. Roosevelt's policies but also his general philosophy must undergo a reorientation of their viewpoints if they desire to be in harmony with the country in which they live. In order to avoid a permanently sour stomach, they must abandon the idea that only that which has been is good.

This does not mean that President Roosevelt shall be above criticism. It means only that he has earned the right to be heard and treated with the greatest respect and attention. Frank, honest criticism of his future proposals will be a contribution to the pursuit of a redistribution of general welfare.

Without in any way seeking to detract from the glory of the President's victory, it is unfortunate that it was so sweeping. Aggressive, intelligent opposition to the party in power is essential to the proper functioning of a democracy. The Democratic increases in House and Senate and the size of the victories won by the incumbent Democrats may have the deplorable result of discouraging opposition and criticism.

* * *

The oldest organization in the world, the Catholic Church, appreciates the value of opposition and criticism, even in so sacred a proceeding as the beatification and canonization of saints. There is an official in the Congregation of Rites at the Vatican formally known as "the promoter of the faith," but informally known as the Devil's advocate.

When candidates for sainthood are nominated it is the function of the Devil's advocate to point out the defects in the evidence upon which a demand for beatification or canonization rests or in the character of the nominee. Thus, as a critic of what the Catholic Church is about to do, he becomes "the promoter of the faith" because upon the competence and fealty with which he performs his duties rests the avoidance of errors.

Thus, in our language a Devil's advocate has come to mean "a critic who picks flaws to evoke controversy and bring out the whole truth." On occasion the Devil's advocate frequently becomes the champion of the worse cause for the sake of argument and establishing the truth of the better cause. Such is an honorable and necessary role, if perhaps a thankless one, in a democracy.

The presence of Devil's advocates—journalistic as well as political—serve to promote faith in our institutions and are essential if American democracy is to survive through the years.

New Deal Wins Record Total Of House Seats

Number May Go Past 330; Republican Veterans Are Defeated.

His successful opponent was Michael J. Kirwin, who also had the blessing of the Townsend organization. In Cleveland Representative Martin L. Sweeney, fiery representative of the Coughlin group, was re-elected. Representative John B. Hollister, of Ohio, ranking Republican member of the House Banking Committee, was defeated by Joseph A. Dixon, Democrat.

In California Mrs. Florence P. Kahn, Republican, who succeeded her husband in the House ten years ago, was another victim of the Democratic landslide. Her successful opponent was Franck R. Havenner, running as a Progressive and Democrat and indorsed by the old-age pension group.

While Townsendites were successful in these and a few other instances, they fell far short of pulling through with even an appreciably large bloc. In Missouri the man against whom they made their strongest campaign, Representative C. Jasper Bell, who conducted the investigation into the old-age pension plan, was re-elected. In California Representative John S. McGroarty, who introduced an old-age pension bill in the House but who later split with the Townsendites and was strongly opposed by them, also was successful.

Representative Ransley Loses.

In Pennsylvania, among present members who were unseated was Representative Harry C. Ransley of Philadelphia, who was elected first to the Sixty-fifth Congress. He was one of the oldest members of the House in point of service. The Democrats, incidentally, made a clean sweep of the Philadelphia Congressional districts. Another Philadelphia Republican who lost was Representative Clare G. Fenerty, a member of the District of Columbia committee.

Early returns indicated that Representative Fred J. Sisson (Democrat), New York, who actively opposed the "red rider" on the District school appropriation, had been defeated, but later indications were that he had pulled through.

While the Democrats made a considerable net gain in membership, Republicans apparently had added to their delegations in New Hampshire, West Virginia, Massachusetts, Kansas and Iowa, although final returns may change some of the results.

Snell Is Re-elected.

Representative Bertrand Snell, of New York, Republican member of the House, was re-elected, and Representative Joseph W. Martin, Eastern manager of the Landon campaign, also was successful. Representative John J. O'Connor, acting majority leader of the House, was re-elected without difficulty.

The Democrats apparently lost the services of Representative Dennis J. Driscoll, of Pennsylvania, who was trailing Benjamin Jarrett, Republican, by a small margin.

Representative William Lemke, Union Party candidate for President, had a slight lead as a candidate for the House from North Dakota, but the result still was in doubt.

Not since 1890 has the Republican membership in the House dropped below 100. In that year it had 88 seats.

The size of the Democratic representation will mean another new alignment of committee assignments. In the last Congress, the Republicans were allowed a little more than one-fourth the membership of committees. Most committees with a membership of 25 included seven Republicans. With the new alignment, it is probable that the Republican representation on such committees will be cut to five or six.

The next session will be faced with the necessity of making many important decisions. Among the outstanding problems will be those involving labor, and neutrality in addition to the question of what to do about the expiration of a large number of New Deal laws. Farm problems also are certain to come up, with the probability Congress will be called upon to enact some kind of crop insurance, a program advocated by President Roosevelt as well as by Gov. Landon.

Democrats Gain 4 Senate Seats In Great Sweep

Hastings, Dickinson, Foes of New Deal, Defeated; Lodge Triumphs.

will be organized largely as they were last session. Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, may decide to head the Banking and Currency Committee instead, taking the post vacated by the late Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, of Florida.

This automatically would advance Senator Kenneth McKellar to the Appropriations Committee chairmanship. In such an eventuality, Senator Carl Hayden, of Arizona, may become chairman of the Postoffice Committee, in place of McKellar. Hayden's advancement would leave the Printing Committee chairmanship unfilled. Chairmanship of the minor Interoceanic Canals Committee was vacated by defeat of Senator Thomas P. Gore, of Oklahoma.

Republicans drew small consolation from the re-election of their own minority leader, Charles L. McNary, of Oregon. But McNary voted for much Administration legislation, refrained from New Deal criticism and declined to stump for the party's Presidential nominee. The result is likely to be an unaggressive Republican organization in the Senate, which may function at the outset by cooperative methods rather than frontal attacks.

Gains made by the Democrats in former Republican territory included election of James H. Hughes, who defeated Hastings in Delaware; Clyde L. Herring, who whipped Dickinson in Iowa; Prentiss M. Brown, who crushed Wilbur M. Brucker in Michigan; William H. Smathers, who outdistanced Senator W. Warren Barbour in New Jersey; Theodore Francis Green, who defeated Senator Jesse Metcalf in Rhode Island, and Harry H. Schwartz, who overcame Senator Robert D. Carey's early lead in Wyoming.

Republicans picked up an unexpected seat in Massachusetts, where Henry Cabot Lodge, jr., youthful member of the Massachusetts House and grandson of the late Henry Cabot Lodge, easily won the prize from Democratic Gov. James M. Curley.

Another liberal who will sit with the Republicans although his interests lie on the other side, will be Ernest Lundeen, Farmer-Laborite and former House member. These men, together with Senator Robert M. La Follette, jr., Wisconsin Progressive, and Senator Henrik Shipstead, Minnesota Farmer-Laborite, nevertheless will receive Republican committee assignments.

Hull Says Election Indorses Policies

Hailing the election results as vindicating the "foreign policies and foreign relations" of the Administration during the last four years, Secretary of State Cordell yesterday said:

"No Administration has ever received an indorsement so nearly universal and so nearly unanimous as that which the American people, in the free exercise of their suffrage, have given this Administration."

Reporters present at the Secretary's press conference yesterday, mindful that the "good neighbor" policies of the New Deal, including both the neutrality law and the reciprocal trade agreements, had come in for considerable criticism from the Republicans, asked him to comment on the results. As is often his custom in matters of policy, the Secretary released a statement later in the afternoon.

Close Forecast Of Gallup Poll Stirs Comment

Many Political, Business Leaders Laud Feature Carried in Post.

it so successful that from one year's profits the paper bought a complete printing establishment.

After graduating, Gallup became a professor of journalism at Drake University and later was made head of the department of journalism and advertising at Northwestern. Four years ago he became research director of a large advertising agency in New York City.

He started his sampling of public opinion several years ago, testing it out thoroughly for a long period before he published the results.

Gallup has a firm belief in the intelligence of the public. He thinks that the mass electorate always makes the right decision.

Ernest G. Draper, Assistant Secretary of Commerce—"I believe the Gallup Poll has shown itself to be an exceedingly interesting and significant experiment in the field of measuring public opinion by scientific polling methods. While the poll's results indicate wide room for improvement as to details from each State, it is nevertheless a long step in advance over the antiquated and now discredited methods recently used by the Literary Digest and the Farm Journal."

Harry B. Mitchell, president, United States Civil Service Commission—"Results indicate very clearly that Dr. Gallup's methods of measuring public opinion have a sound basis."

L. J. O'Rourke, director of scientific Research, United States Civil Service Commission—"Another demonstration of the value of statistical analysis and scientific research."

Robert Lincoln O'Brien, chairman, United States Federal Trade Commission—"The Gallup method of measuring public opinion undoubtedly demonstrated its superiority over other devices for prejudging the results of the election and you are to be congratulated upon having maintained so effective a service."

Warren B. Francis, Washington correspondent, Los Angeles Times—"I placed a great deal of confidence in the Gallup poll and followed it with great interest."

Arthur Clarendon Smith, vice president and general manager, Smith's Transfer & Storage Co.—"The results of the last election proved to the American people that the American Institute of Public Opinion is one of the best methods if not the best method to engage the thoughts and ideas of our people."

Richard L. Wilson, Washington correspondent, Des Moines Register-Tribune—"The accuracy of the scientific method of sampling voters' sentiment was substantiated by the election's confirmation of the general results of Dr. Gallup's survey. It shows that he painstakingly sought to analyze all the different classes of voters. The poll should be of great benefit in the future in testing the sentiment of the American people."

Mrs. Jessie K. Biddle, president, D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs—"I was most interested to see that the Gallup poll so closely predicted the result of the election. These polls are a real contribution to the intelligent newspaper reader who wants to know what the people of the country are thinking on important national issues."

Vincent Saccardi, manager, Washington District of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.—"The scientific method of taking polls of selected cross sections of the people, as developed by Dr. Gallup, is certainly an excellent one. The accurate forecast, which was accepted by most people, assured business leaders throughout the country of the re-election of our great President by an overwhelming majority. It is my personal opinion that this prevented any serious reaction in the stock market and it was responsible for the unusual confidence displayed prior to election throughout the country. I personally feel that Dr. Gallup rendered a great service to the American people in this forecast."

James A. Cobb—"Being a daily reader of The Post and greatly interested in the outcome of the Presidential election which has just been held I studied very closely all the polls, including the Gallup poll. I was especially interested in the way the measurement of public opinion was made by Dr. Gallup and while I was in hopes that his poll would turn out to be erroneous, I am amazed and astonished at his accuracy and in my opinion its scientific value has been proved."

Mrs. Jouett Shouse—"I always find the poll interesting to read even though I do not always agree with its picture of the national situation."

James M. Hepbron, acting director of Washington Criminal Justice Association—"Results of the election have proved beyond a questionable doubt the efficiency of scientifically conducted polls on questions of national importance, as demonstrated by the remarkable accuracy with which the America Speaks poll predicted the ultimate result of yesterday's landslide. Dr. Gallup, under whose supervision the America Speaks polls are conducted, is to be congratulated for the service he has rendered in the development of the method which he uses in securing such amazing results."

Col. Edwin A. Halsey, secretary-treasurer of the Democratic Senatorial campaign committee and sergeant-at-arms of the Democratic National Convention—"I want to congratulate The Washington Post on the accuracy of the election forecasts presented in Dr. George Gallup's American Institute of Public Opinion poll, published in The Post. As a private in the rear ranks during the campaign, I kept closely in touch with election trends, and the positively uncanny manner in which Dr. Gallup foretold the results was a revelation to me."

Fingerprinting Decreed.

Miami Beach, Fla., Nov. 4 (AP).—The council adopted an ordinance today which will require virtually every person who works for a living in Miami Beach this winter to be fingerprinted and photographed and to carry a police identification card. The regulation is designed to keep out criminals and to safeguard visitors.

Mothers at District Zoo Staging Own Baby Derby; Mrs. Johanna Lion, Mme. Rose Jaguar Tied, 10 All Senora Molly Brown Bear Was Champion Until Death Ended Reign.

Johanna (right) one of Zoo's prolific mothers with Trilby, only one of her ten youngsters which has not strayed from the parental fold.

Baby derbies are no novelty at the zoo.

Now, at first glance, this revelation may hardly seem sufficiently profound or important enough to compete, as a topic of conversation, with the outcome of the election in New Hampshire. Don't forget, though, that a recent baby derby in Canada received international attention, in fact, is still very much in the news.

True, the Roosevelt vote may have confounded even his stanchest supporters, but did you know Johanna had ten lion cubs in a six-year period?

Granted that the first upset of a Literary Digest poll is something to speculate upon, have you ever considered that Rose has become the mother of 10 bouncing jaguars since 1933?

Of course, the Democratic sweep in Virginia merits a postmortem or two, but witness the case of Dinah, the rainbow boa, who ran off with the reptilian contest when she produced 14 baby boas—and girls—at one time.

And now that your minds are completely diverted from such prosaic things as the Electoral College and the next four-year plan, let us give Molly her due. Numerically speaking, Molly was the champion mother of them all.

If, when this European brown bear was in her prime, Washington had had a Charles Vance Miller to award a prize—perhaps a bushel of juicy apples, peanuts or steaks, the winner to have his choice—to the most prolific Zoo mother, Molly would have had a walkaway of it.

Provided, of course, she would not have had to compete with the guppies, certain birds and other specimens that multiply almost as often as you change razor blades.

Note that the past tense is being used in speaking of Molly. That's because she is gone. Dead. It happened about six months ago and neither Zoo Director William H. Mann nor Head Keeper William H. Blackburne ever said anything about it.

Between 1911 and 1927 she presented the Washington public with 27 tiny, fuzzy cubs. That's a record which Dr. Mann and Blackburne expect to stand for a long time, as far as any of the big animals are concerned.

Yet Molly had not even an obituary to mark the conclusion of her fruitful career. The Zoo heads, you see, are willing enough to announce births, but loath to talk about deaths.

Now that the champion has entered the ursine Valhalla, the top-ranking mothers in Washington's own baby derby are Johanna, the lioness, and Rose, the jaguar, who are credited with 10 each; Hannah, the heron, who added three more heronettes to her list this year, and a number of deer and llamas that have borne four to six young each in the last few years.

The Mongolian wild horses, rhesus monkeys, zebra finches, buffalo and Canadian geese also contribute frequently to the zoological collection. Then there is Ramona, the Alaskan brown bear mated to Snowy the polar, whose 9-month-old hybrid triplets are thriving.

Three bundles of cuteness have been visited upon Mr. and Mrs. Pygmy Hippo on as many different occasions but each time the mother slew her progeny either by trampling, biting or refusing to nurse it.

Most conspicuous non-participants in the derby are the pairs of Sumatran tigers, Siberian tigers and black jaguars. The total of their offspring comes to exactly nothing, which irritates Dr. Mann and Blackburne no little because all six are handsome specimens whose cubs would be very valuable.

On the other hand, lion cubs are now a drug on the market, which accounts for the fact that all of Johanna's 10 babies were born prior to 1932.

"We don't want any more lions," spoke Blackburne coldly, unsympathetic to any ambitions Johanna might have of breaking the tie with her neighbor Rose and gaining at least a temporary lead in the derby.

Allen Explains How He 'Called' 46-State Sweep

Official Forgot Advice of Politicians, Locked Self in His Office.

Commissioner George E. Allen, modern Delphian oracle, whose published election forecast in The Washington Post gave Alf M. Landon only Vermont and Maine, bases his predicting powers on solitude, personal observation, ability to forget politicians' statements and a genius for big numbers.

"I forgot everything I had learned from a politician," he said, "locked myself in my office and thought it out in solitude."

Commissioner Allen's practice in big numbers, he said, came back in 1916, when he was captain and quarterback of Cumberland University's football team and predicted that Cumberland would hold Georgia Tech to 200 points. The score was Georgia Tech 222, Cumberland 0.

The Mississippian said his forecast was the result of three months first-hand observation and an hour of serious thinking. His prediction was published in The Post three days before Democratic National Chairman Farley announced his final forecast for the election.

Allen said he studied pre-election polls, picked out 24 doubtful States. He visited each of these States, he said, and talked to workers, salesmen and waitresses, steering clear of politicians. Then an hour alone in his office here and the decision, all for Roosevelt, except Maine and Vermont, was made.

In addition to the glory of being a successful prophet and a rival to Dr. George C. Gallup, director of the American Institute of Public Affairs, Commissioner Allen was reported as being on the collecting end of many bets.

Dr. Simon to Discuss 'Conversing With Dead'

The Rev. Dr. Abram Simon will talk at 8:15 p. m. tomorrow at the Eighth Street Temple of the Washington Hebrew Congregation on the point of view of the Jewish religion to the question: "Can We Communicate With the Dead?"

Dr. Simon had been requested to discuss this subject after interest was aroused by the ineffectual attempt of Mrs. Harry Houdini to speak with the spirit of her husband, the famous magician and exposer of mediums.

G-Men Arrest Double-Crosser Of Gang in Theft

Nick Malos, who double-crossed the gang which stole $2,046,000 from two New York banks in 1934 and 1935, was captured by G-men in Chicago, the Federal Bureau of Investigation announced here last night.

Malos, a member of the "Greek Combine," which disposed of stolen securities, was hunted by members of his own mob seeking revenge, but in spite of the axiom that it takes a thief to catch a thief, G-men located him first.

Malos was retained by the gangsters who held up the United States Trust Co., the Bank of Manhattan Co., and other banks, to sell stolen securities through brokerage accounts in Boston. They got $1,456,000 from the Bank of Manhattan Co. in January, 1935, and $590,000 from the United States Trust Co. in 1934.

He is alleged to have "taken" the mob for $9,000 by stealing the proceeds of the sale of one block of securities which he had sold after altering serial numbers to evade detection. His double-cross made him a wanted man by both gangsters and law officers.

Though his associates in crime could not find him, Federal agents did after a long search, and he is now being held in Chicago in Federal custody awaiting removal to New York City.

His was the nineteenth arrest in the two big bank robberies. To date G-men have recovered more than $1,000,000 worth of the above-mentioned securities. They were all identified in the technical laboratory of the F. B. I. In addition to this amount, $70,000 worth of various stolen securities have been located bearing spurious serial numbers. All the latter were disposed of in several cities along the East Coast by means of "front men's" brokerage accounts.

Voting Bears Out 4-Year Forecast Of Brooklyn Man

In the confusion of postelection bet-paying, Dr. Charles Frederick Pabst, of Brooklyn, N. Y., chief dermatologist at Green Hospital there, chuckled happily yesterday.

For, at 6 p. m., Election Day in 1932, which fell on November 8, Dr. Pabst sent President Roosevelt a telegram of congratulations in which he predicted his victory over Hoover, and then forecast the result which was to come Tuesday, four years later.

President Roosevelt sent a prompt and enthusiastic reply.

"Your enthusiasm and good will touch me deeply," said Mr. Roosevelt. "It is my earnest wish that I always deserve the confidence you have shown in me."

Council Is Elected In Virgin Islands

St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, Nov 4 (AP).—Four new members held places today on the new municipal council with three re-elected members, following municipal elections yesterday in which women voted for the first time.

Twenty of the 30 women who registered cast their ballots. The women voters were principally teachers and government employes.

The elections were held under the new Virgin Islands organic law, passed at the last session of Congress, which changed the number on the council from 15 to 7.

The number of women who registered was stated to have remained small because of a controversy over the decision of former Federal Judge Albert Levitt, who ordered the granting of the franchise to women. Local opinion held the new law provides extension of the franchise two years hence.

Landon Back At Desk; Plans Hunting Trip

Topeka, Kans., Nov. 4 (AP).—Alf M. Landon dug into a final two months of governing Kansas today, smiling away questions on his unprecedented defeat at Presidential polls while planning an early duck-hunting vacation.

Big mallards and flashing teels were first on the Republican leader's tongue when reporters asked about Republican Party plans and his own political future.

"I expect to go duck hunting in a few days," Landon told newsmen gathered in his Statehouse office soon after his 9 o'clock arrival.

"I've got a lot of State business to do," the Kansan added. "I'm going to be here all day."

Landon puffed a cigar as he talked. He wore one of his favorite campaign neckties—a dark blue with white elephant design.

In the Governor's outer office a few State employes discussed returns in an election which left Landon only two States and eight of 531 electoral votes. Landon was standing at his desk, looking over a large stack of telegrams.

"We still have some photographers with us," he said, smiling at several cameras. "I supposed they would all be called in."

"Anything in the election on which you wish to comment?" he was asked.

"Not this morning."

"How about future Republican Party plans?"

Baby Derby Entry Silences Husband With Lusty Wallop

By the Associated Press.

Toronto, Nov. 4.—A stork derby father's one-man campaign for recognition as "the champion" having been neatly squelched by his wife's fistic prowess, the Millar kiddies cavalcade resumed its crazy progress tonight toward the courts.

Martin Kenny, who beat his chest proudly in a downtown hotel room last night and proclaimed himself "the winner of the stork derby," was a sadder and wiser man today. Mrs. Lily Kenny took care of that.

At the hospital to which Kenny was taken after he had been so effectively silenced by Mrs. Kenny, it was stated that Kenny was brought there last night "intoxicated," and that he had been sent home in an ambulance.

Mrs. Kenny finally retired last night, unabashed, with the statement that "I certainly am having a lot of trouble just for $500,000."

But the trouble of which Mrs. Kenny complained is nothing to what she faces Friday when the "mothers' clause" of the late Charles Vance Millar's will reaches court. Her repeated assertions that "I'm the champion" and "I'll take all or none," are confronted with a host of opposition.

Syrian Strike Fatal.

Beirut, Syria, Nov. 4 (AP).—A number of persons were reported killed or wounded tonight in the town of Tripoli, 40 miles from here, in clashes in a strike called by Moslems demanding the union of Lebanon with Syria.

Schoolboy Is Thrown For Four-Tooth Loss

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 4 (AP). An alert groundkeeper and the United States mails joined today in correcting a four-tooth football injury received by a Mobile high school player in a game here last week.

The athlete lost a bridge with four teeth in it during a game between Mobile and Phillips High, and, although the referee granted a time out, the missing molars could not be located.

But today a caretaker found the teeth, and they were mailed back to Mobile.

Market Booms In Post-Ballot Rush of Buying

Industries, Commodities Rise to Peaks; Utilities Register Drop.

vanced $2.10 to $97.20, the highest since the spring of 1930. The 15 rails rose 20 cents to $41.40 and 15 utilities dropped $1.50 to $51.30.

More uniform was the forward march of commodities, reaching out into world markets for such important staples as cotton, rubber and copper. The advance pushed the Associated Press wholesale index for 35 leading commodities to the highest of the recovery from the deflation lows touch early in 1933.

Buoyed by heavy buying abroad, copper for export extended its recent sharp rise to nearly 10¾ cents a pound, up about one-third of a cent. The recent advance in rubber gained headway, lifting futures about a third of a cent to well above 17 cents a pound.

Copper reached a new high on its climb from a depression low under 5 cents and rubber on its recovery from a low of about 2½ cents a pound.

Cotton futures ended 85 cents to $1.40 a bale higher. Grains, hides, silk, lead, cocoa and cottonseed oil were other commodities participating in the broad advance. Tin in London stretched a gain since Monday to about $40 a ton.

Boy Jockey Denies Tricking Bettors

Phil Lampkin, bandmaster, and two actresses testified in police court yesterday they had been victimized out of $45 which they gave to William Preston Sharp, 18, a jockey.

Sharp pleaded not guilty to three charges of larceny after trust and demanded a jury trial. Judge Edward M. Curran set bond at $100 on each charge.

Lampkin and the showgirls, Elaine Arden and Martha Mears, testified Sharp had been "hanging around backstage" at their theater soliciting money to bet on horses and dogs. Miss Mears said she thought the race was in Louisiana. The other two were divided between Pimlico and Boston.

Miss Arden said she gave Sharp $30; Lampkin told the court he posted $10 and Miss Mears gave the other $5. They said Sharp did not return after the bets were placed.

OTARD
The only Cognac bottled at the Chateau de Cognac

Ode to Otard by Ogden nash

O IS FOR 'OSTESS

A tactful young hostess named Bruce
Discovered a mouse in her mousse.
She giggled, "Oh look!
"It amuses the cook,
"And it helps, if you're trying to reduce!"
Her guests were the creme de la cream,
So they stifled their impulse to scream,
And they weathered the siege
By noblesse oblige
And Otard, the cognac supreme.

Try an OTARD BRANDY and Soda . . .

Only OTARD, with its rich, full flavor—has the distinction of being bottled at the Chateau de Cognac itself. Distilled in the old, historic tradition, OTARD is one of the world's truly great cognac brandies.

OTARD ★★★ Cognac—delicious with soda or straight. It costs no more!

French Official Urges Arming Of 2 Frontiers

Deladier Says Nation Also Should Speed Making of War Materials.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Nov. 4.—Envisioning a possible lightning German attack against France, Defense Minister Edouard Daladier today urged immediate fortification of the Belgian and Swiss frontiers and a speed-up in the manufacture of war materials.

Addressing the Chamber of Deputies army committee on the eve of a new session of Parliament tomorrow, Daladier asked that 500,000,000 francs (about $23,250,000) be expended to fortify France's borders.

He stressed especially the erection of defenses facing Switzerland, to protect France against a German army which, he said, "might violate Switzerland's neutrality."

Series of "Pill-Boxes."

The northern frontier fortifications, the defense minister declared, will be of the same construction as the famed Maginot line fronting on Germany—a series of steel and concrete "pill-boxes."

The government decided defense works must be built along the Belgian border, Daladier said, because of Belgium's recent declaration of neutrality.

(Belgian Foreign Minister Paul Henry Spaak described the Belgian position as a lack of confidence in collective security, especially as represented by the League of Nations, but a willingness to adhere to its old agreements. France and Belgium have a military alliance.)

Daladier told the committee the German army lacks sufficient officers for the huge number of soldiers enrolled under that nation's requirement of two-year service, but that the number of officers would be sufficiently increased in a year.

He also gave details—not disclosed by members of the committee after the session—on Germany's construction of fortifications in the Rhineland.

Obligatory physical training for all Frenchmen, beginning at the age of 18, was proposed by Daladier as an aid to building up the French army. Under the plan which he said he would introduce in Parliament, youth would be sent to physical instruction camps.

The number of professional troops in the French army, he asserted, has been increased in the last few months from 106,000 to 144,000 through intensive recruiting. He said he hoped to strengthen the army further by making reserves serve 30 days each year instead of the present 21.

Mobile guards tonight were assigned to protect the Italian Consulate at Chambery against possible Communist attacks, authorities announced, as the aftermath of a clash there Sunday.

Prosecution of two Communists charged with assaulting five Italian Fascists, including the Consul, was being prepared following an indication that the Italian government would be satisfied with such action.

Compulsory War Service.

Brussels, Nov. 4 (AP).—Defense Minister Gen. Denis today urged 18 months compulsory military service before a special defense committee. Earlier the government of Premier Paul van Zeeland was given a 133-to-44 vote of confidence.

Suspect in Holdup Brought to District

Charged with the daring daylight holdup more than two years ago of William J. Bell, painter and contractor here, William W. Weitlauf, alias Gohlson, 25, was returned to the District yesterday from Michigan State Prison in Jackson, Mich.

Already indicted for the crime by the grand jury, he was lodged in jail at the First Precinct as soon as he arrived here with Detective Sergt. James Tolson.

Weitlauf has completed a two-year sentence for parole violation. He was arrested by Michigan authorities shortly after Bell was robbed here about 12:30 p. m. July 28, 1934.

At the time Bell had gone to his bank and drawn out funds to meet his pay roll of $1,330. As he stepped from the bank the robber thrust a pistol against his ribs, forced him into an automobile, made him drive to a secluded spot and stole the money.

Police here knew the prisoner as Gohlson. They learned of his alleged part in the robbery through underworld sources.

Sarah Churchill Rules Out Romance; Statesman's Daughter Firm on Career

Dancing Briton Will Open in Vaudeville Here As Vic Oliver Partner.

SARAH CHURCHILL. VIC OLIVER.

Sarah Churchill, dancing daughter of the famous British statesman and writer, would like it understood she is in America to promote her stage career, rather than her "romantic interests."

Shortly after she arrived in Washington yesterday afternoon she made it clear that:

"More than anything in the world I want to be a success on the stage. That is my chief concern now, as it was when I left home. Mr. Oliver has been very kind to help me get started, but there is no romance. There never was."

She said this while cameras clicked and curious men and women crowded around for a closer look at this wispishly slender girl with gray-green eyes, auburn hair and Mayfair accent, who braved parental objections to cross the Atlantic unchaperoned to meet Vic Oliver, the tall, curley-haired comedian, who accompanied her to Washington and hovered in the offing yesterday to help her answer questions.

Both Deny Romance.

At the reception at the Carlton Hotel in honor of Oliver and Miss Churchill, who will begin a vaudeville appearance here on Friday, he proffered the information that they met about a year ago when both were playing in a show in London. He had a leading role and she was at first merely a girl in the line. "But I knew even then she had real talent," he said. "I was sure that she would win success."

She came to Washington, he further explained, to be a guest on his program at a local theater.

This will be her last vaudeville engagement, he explained. After this, she plans to go back to New York and study dancing and dramatics until she gets the stage offer she wants. "She has already had dozens of offers," he continued, "but so far has accepted none of them."

Oliver also denied there was any romance connected with Miss Churchill's coming over from London with him. "She is my protegee; not fiancee," he averred. "I think she has a tremendous amount of talent and will have an enviable stage career. We are very warm friends, but not sweethearts."

Miss Churchill admitted her parents strongly objected to her going on the stage, and that her friends are still wondering why she did it. "But of course nobody will mind at all, if I really succeed," she added.

Had Parents Consent.

No, she didn't come to America without consulting her mother and father. "They weren't very keen about my coming," she said, "but they did give their consent. And my brother didn't rush over after me to stop my wedding," she went on, her eyes twinkling. "He had planned to come over anyway to cover the Presidential campaign. My trip did cause him to start over a bit sooner, but only because he thought I might need someone to look after me in New York, since I had never been here before. He is still in this country and is now on his way to Hollywood to write some stories on the American screen industry for the London Daily Mail."

"Is your mother now on her way to America?" Miss Churchill was asked. The puzzled look clouding her face for an instant soon gave way to a smile. "Not that I know of," she chuckled. "But the American press seems ever so much better informed about me and my family than I am."

She is the first member of her family ever to perform behind the footlights, though her American-born grandmother once achieved some fame as a ballroom dancer in a strictly lady-like Victorian fashion.

U. S. Marshals Seek Hoeppels, In Hiding Here

Representative and Son Reported in City by Bondsman.

Representative John H. Hoeppel, of California, and his son, Charles, believed to be hiding in Washington were the objects of a city-wide search by a half dozen deputy United States Marshals last night following issuance of new bench warrants for their arrest.

Mysteriously missing since their departure from Arcadia, Calif., last week, the Hoeppels are facing jail terms of from four months to a year as a result of their conviction last December of conspiring to solicit $1,000 in exchange for an appointment to the United States Military Academy at West Point.

Unless the fugitive father and son surrender or are located within the next 24 hours, it was indicated last night that the Federal Bureau of Investigation will be asked to take up the search.

Representative Hoeppel and his son are free under bonds of $1,000 each. Milton Kronheim, their bondsmen, has been warned that the bond will be forfeited unless he produces them to authorities "within the very, very near future."

Kronheim's office reported last night that "information" has been received placing the hunted pair in Washington.

"We believe they are attempting to make legal arrangements to evade commitment to prison," a spokesman at the office declared. "But we have no idea where they are."

Assistant United States Attorney David A. Pine, who prosecuted the Hoeppels, said he was "entirely in the dark" as to their whereabouts.

It was learned last night that investigators for Kronheim's office were canvassing the city's hotels in efforts to apprehend the pair. Hoeppel last week wired his bondsman that he expected to come to Washington about November 2.

Appeals for Pianos.

The Community Center Department yesterday issued an appeal for old upright pianos, to aid in its recreational activities. Persons having such instruments were asked to communicate wit hthe Community Center office.

$100,000 Insull Goods Go on Block

New York, Nov. 4 (AP).—Chattels of the Insull family worth $100,000 or more went on the auction block today in a sale ordered by trustees of the estates because storage charges were eating up principal.

Fine table porcelains from which guests of the one-time utility magnate, Samuel Insull, sr., supped; Romneys, Martins, Hoppers and other portraits at which they gazed; antique furniture on which they reclined—prior to the collapse of the Insull fortune in 1932—went under the hammer of a polite auctioneer.

Effects of the estate of Mrs. Insull were appraised at some $50,000. Wares of the late Mrs. Samuel Insull, jr., first wife of the utility chieftain's son, himself an important figure in the Insull empire, were also appraised at $50,000.

The American National Bank & Trust Co., of Chicago, trustees of the senior Mrs. Insull's estate, ordered the sale.

D. C. Woman, 86, Likes Birthdays, But Not Politics

There are lots of women in Washington as old as Mrs. Mary A. Edmunds—she's 86—but they won't admit it.

Mrs. Edmunds lives at 1614 Q street northwest, where the other day she celebrated her birthday.

Yesterday, Mrs. Edmunds wasn't sure just how many Washington women are as old as she, but she was sure there are a lot more of them than you think, only they aren't telling anybody.

"I never could understand why a woman minded to tell her age," she went on, her eyes laughing. "She can't fool many people about it anyway, so she might as well be truthful."

Mrs. Edmunds came to Washington 29 years ago. During those years she has lived in the same house in which she now resides with her son-in-law and daughter, Dr. and Mrs. Clarence A. Weaver.

Her chief pleasure in life is listening to the radio, she said, although she hasn't indulged in that much lately, "Since every time you turn it on these days, all you hear is politics. I'm glad it's all over."

Mrs. Edmunds preferred to talk about her birthday party when she had "cake and turkey with all the trimmings."

Farley Will Return Tomorrow To Resume Duties in Cabinet

Plans to Leave Next Week for Trip to Ireland; 'As Maine Goes, So Goes Vermont,' His Comment on Landslide.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 4.—Democratic Chairman James A. Farley said today he would end his leave of absence as Postmaster General and take up his official duties again Friday by attending a Cabinet meeting in Washington.

He has been on leave since early in the campaign.

He declined to comment on reports he would leave the Cabinet when President Roosevelt begins his second term other than to say:

"I'm going back to serve out my term. I have nothing to say about what will happen after that."

He did say, however, he intended to continue as Democratic national chairman regardless of whether he stayed on as Postmaster General.

Farley said he planned to leave on the Normandie November 11 for a short vacation in Ireland.

Commenting on the election, he reminded newspapermen of his statement Sunday that President Roosevelt would carry every State except Maine and Vermont.

"We would have carried Maine if we had put forth the same effort as we did in the September election," he added.

Asked if he had anything to say about the old adage that "As Maine goes, so goes the Nation," Farley said the only thing the saying proved was that "As Maine goes, so goes Vermont."

"Do you take the heavy vote for the President as a blank check?" he was asked.

"The people of this country," he replied, "need have no fear of what will happen during the next Administration of President Roosevelt."

Writer to Speak.

Paul Ward, Washington correspondent for the Baltimore Sun, will analyze the election results and discuss the next Roosevelt Administration at the session of the Capital City Forum at 8:15 p. m. tomorrow at 1502 Fourteenth street northwest.

Asheville, N. C., Nov. 4 (AP).—William D. Upshaw, Presidential candidate on the Prohibition ticket in 1932, was reported in a critical condition by Biltmore Hospital attaches tonight as preparations were being made for him to undergo the second blood transfusion in the last few days.

Upshaw underwent a major operation for the congestion of the bladder Saturday morning and Tuesday his condition was considered "low." Blood for his first transfusion was given by his daughter, Miss Margaret Upshaw, a school teacher of Black Mountain, N. C.

The Black Automatic

By WILLIAM BYRON MOWERY

Chapter 31.

Harla gasped. "Noel! Are you saying that Rocco might have slipped away again?"

Noel shook his head slowly, like a person with a torment in his brain. "I don't know. God, I actually don't know. I'm not saying positively that he slipped us, but that's my belief now. Harla, I believe Frank Rocco is still alive."

Harla shook his arm. "Noel, don't allow yourself to think that!" His doubts, his raging uncertainty, made her suspect that he had brooded too long on the disastrous Rocco case. "You yourself killed Rocco. Everyone knows you did. The official investigation proved that you did. He was buried. He's dead."

"Maybe! And maybe he slipped us and shed his skin again. Maybe, with the midwest too hot for him, and with no money to go abroad, he decided to hit for the oblivion of his native north. Maybe he got wind of a youngster at Manitou with a rich mining prize and collected another outfit, and——"

Harla sprang to her feet, stunned by his words, even though she utterly disbelieved them. "Noel, stop! Stop it! Don't let your imagination run wild like that." With wide eyes she stared at him, at the red campfire in the dark valley, at the black pine drogue hiding the big cabin where Flood was lying asleep. "Flood—Rocco . . . It can't be! Noel, don't say that or think it. You're tired and overwrought and — and——"

"——and crazy?" Noel completed calmly. "That's what I thought when the idea first struck me. I laughed at it. But I'm not laughing now. If we had time I could give you several hard-fact items linking Rocco to Flood—items that you can't laugh off. It's my opinion that when you pull the mask from Flood you'll see nobody but Frank Rocco. He's changed, maybe—older, shrewder, tired of outlawry, but the same man."

Because she knew of the Rocco myth and of the pernicious harm it had done, Harla understood at last the forces that were driving Noel to this battle. He wanted to wipe out the mistake he had made and to end that poisonous myth. The granite hardness which she had seen in him was his grim intent that either he or Spencer was going to take Flood back to the city country, prove up his career, strip all his glory clothes off and expose him as a sordid killer. With a cold impersonality, Noel was sinking himself, his own wishes and his very life, in a greater issue. He was lookng upon hmself and his fine-tempered sword as a weapon in the hands of destiny.

"What I've told you," Noel concluded, "is what I want you to tell Herm Spencer. That's the favor I'm asking of you. If it isn't in the cards for me to do the job, tell Herm that I want him to take Flood alive, thoroughly investigate and uncover the man, and then hang him."

He picked up the rifle and offered it to Harla. "And now you must be going. You've time enough but none to spare. There's a canoe at the lower end of the lake. It's fast and light; you carry it over those totes easily; you can be down at the Dinokui Island in 12 hours. These men can't follow. I slit their canoes, and besides they'll have their hands plenty full here, with me and this machine gun."

Harla cut him short. "I tell you I'm not going! You came up here to save me, and now I'm not sneaking off and leaving you pay the bill. I'm staying here and helping you."

"I don't need your help. If this Vickers can't bring me through, nothing can."

"That Vickers won't! A machine gun makes a lot of noise and throws a lot of lead around, but it doesn't amount to much in a bush fight. One hit, one bullet placed where you wan't it, is worth a thousand misses. Those men down there are superb shots, Noel. They'll scatter, they'll start sniping at you, and that'll be your finish."

"Well," he said. "If your diagnosis is correct, I don't see any sense to your staying here and getting rubbed out, too."

"I do! You and I together would have a chance of coming through alive. You by yourself would not. But why does either of us have to stay?" Her hands crept up to his shoulders, and she pleaded: "Noel, let's both go. We can. We can go together. We broke away from those men once, in country worse than this. We can save ourselves and get back to Manitou, and then you can take up your hunt again."

Noel shook his head. "Flood would know I've been here. He'd fade. He'd never come back. I'd lose him. After all, I'm sitting here with a machine gun trained on their camp, and that's a grip I won't let go of. At the least I'll smear that outfit up so bad that they'll be easy meat for Spencer. I've got to stay."

"All right, if that's your decision." She leaned the rifle against the windfall and resolutely sat down. "I'm staying, too."

For a long moment Noel looked at her in helpless silence. Then: "There at Manitou, in Alice's cabin, I tried to argue with you, just as I'm doing now. If you'd have listened to me then, if you'd have gone back south, you wouldn't have been captured, I wouldn't be here, we wouldn't be in this fix. But you wouldn listen, and here we are. You threw a monkey wrench into my hunt——"

"Yes, I did," Harla admitted. "But it's thrown now, Noel, and I'm not going to let you pay for my blindness."

"Then square your mistake by taking my message in to Manitou."

"No."

"You're not fooling me any, Harla," Noel said, "about your chief motive for staying here. You want to drive a bullet into Flood." He picked up the rifle, as though wanting the gun in his own hands. "This fight is bigger than any personal feud. The little vengeance bullet of yours would do a mountain of harm."

After a bitter struggle with herself, Harla looked up at him and promised, "If—if you'll make peace with me, Noel, I'll forget that bullet."

"I don't believe it. You'd forget your promise, you'd break it, you'd double-cross——"

"Noel!"

"I'm sorry. Forgive me."

"Do you take my promise? You may as well take it, Noel, for it's all you're going to get from me. I'm staying."

He was silent in defeat.

"Please give me the rifle, Noel."

"You won't shoot," he asked, reluctantly, helpless against her decision, "even if you see Flood, getting away?"

"I promise I will not."

"And even if the fight goes against us?"

"Even if the fight goes against us."

Silently he handed her the rifle.

While the slow dawn came on, they plugged up the worst openings in their pill box and arranged the loose windfall into a sort of breastworks.

The gray light broadened till they made out the log buildings in the drogue below and saw Flood's sentry, a Yellowknife Indian, sitting on a boulder in front of Jimmy's cabin.

The wilderness gradually stirred and yawned and woke. On a solitary snag up slope a golden eagle flexed its stiffened wings and launched itself on the day's hunt. Up the valley a band of goats, driven to the high rocks by the night roaming wolves, tripped daintily back down toward timberline and fell to browsing in a patch of moraine green. The bright morning sun was striking full against the western fields of ice and snow; and under its melting warmth the glacier torrents, nearly stilled during the chill of night, started murmuring again, louder and louder, swelling toward their midday mountain song.

Maxwell Case Venue Verdict Due This Week

Judge to Rule on Plea for Change From Wise Va., for Second Trial.

A decision on where Edith Maxwell is to be tried for the "slipper murder" of her father will be made this week, it was learned yesterday.

Charles Henry Smith, Alexandria, Va., attorney, who will defend the Lonesome Pine school teacher, has been notified to appear before Circuit Judge H. A. W. Skeen at Wise, Va., either tomorrow or Saturday to make his motion for a change of venue.

Smith, in asking that the trial be held in some other county, will argue that, because of the publicity and ill feeling that attended Edith's first trial in Wise, it will be impossible to get an impartial jury when she is called to trial a second time, November 16, at Wise.

Up to Judge.

It is entirely within the discretion of Judge Skeen whether the trial is to be held at Wise or elsewhere. He it was who presided at Edith's first trial a year ago, when a jury of mountaineers found her guilty of murder in the first degree and sentenced her to 25 years in the State Penitentiary, although the testimony showed that she struck her father with a slipper while he, in a drunken rage, was beating her and threatening to kill her.

Post readers were so much aroused by the 25-year sentence that they began sending contributions toward an Edith Maxwell defense fund. The money was used to carry the fight before the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals.

Smith, who was invited to defend Edith by The Post after the first trial, made the arguments before the high court, which in the end ordered the verdict set aside and called for a new trial.

The largest batch of contributions yet received by The Post toward the expenses of the second trial came in yesterday. Contributors were

5 Women Win Seats in House; 4 Democrats

4 Retain Their Positions; Nan Wood Honeyman to Get First Term.

By the Associated Press.

Returns yesterday showed four women re-elected to the House of Representatives while a fifth was chosen for her first term.

Returned were Virginia E. Jenckes (D), Indiana; Mary T. Norton (D), New Jersey; Caroline O'Day (D), New York, and Edith Nourse Rogers (R), Massachusetts.

Elected as Oregon's first Congresswoman was Nan Wood Honeyman, Democratic daughter of the author, Charles Erskine Scott Wood.

The only incumbent defeated was the veteran of 12 years in the House, Florence Kahn (R), California.

Four Women Defeated.

Four other women who sought Congressional posts on the major party tickets were beaten by men. They were Bertha Bauer and Irene Tomas, Chicago Republicans; Agnes C. Reavy (D), Massachusetts, and Melinda Alexander (R), New York.

In Iowa, Matilda Sorenson Clark and Isabel Jorgenson campaigned unsuccessfully under the Farmer-Labor banner for the House, as did Mrs. Herbert Rudd in New Hampshire.

The office of Senator Hattie Caraway, of Arkansas, was not involved in this year's election, and Senator Rose Long, of Louisiana, appointed to succeed her slain husband, did not seek re-election.

94 Sought Posts.

Ninety-four women sought national and State posts in the election. Sixty-six of them campaigned under the banners of the Republican and Democratic parties.

Isabella Greenway, a member of the feminine contingent in the House last term, did not seek re-election. Her place was won by a man.

Mrs. Honeyman Happy.

Portland, Oreg., Nov. 4 (AP).—An almost constantly ringing telephone gave Oregon's first woman Congressman-elect hardly time for her usual breakfast of lemon juice today, but she and her family were too happy over the election to find other than pleasure in the disturbance.

Mrs. Nanny Wood Honeyman, 55, a mother and grandmother, won election from the Third (Portland) Oregon District over the incumbent Republican, William Ekwall.

Her husband, David T. Honeyman, is secretary-treasurer of the Honeyman Hardware Co., and they have a son, David, 25, and a daughter, Judith, 20, at home.

David, affiliated with the Honeyman Hardware Co., will stay in Portland with Mr. Honeyman, but Judith will go East with Mrs. Honeyman. Another daughter, Mrs. Kent Robinson, resides in Rochester, N. Y.

Mrs. Honeyman said:

"Well, of course I expected Roosevelt to win, and by a large majority in Oregon, but his Nation-wide poll did surprise me. I consider the vote to be a mandate of the people, and shall take it as such in wholeheartedly supporting our President."

She also will attempt to bring about further development of the port of Portland.

Her maid had more than a good word to say for the new Representative: "Yes, she can cook; in fact, she taught me to cook."

George Barnes, 90, Dies, Was Editor, Educator

Howell, Mich., Nov. 4 (AP).—George Barnes, colorful 90-year-old reporter for the Livingston Republican, died at his home here today. He suffered a heart attack Sunday.

Reporter, editor, educator, legislator and soldier—he had been them all in his career.

He purchased the Republican in 1889 and consolidated it with the Livingston Press in 1928. He continued with the combined publication first as president of the company and then as courthouse and county jail reporter until his death.

lookout for three men, supposed to be wandering loose, who voted for Landon. It was a gag of the desk sergeant's. All of us have been laughing about it all day. Ha, ha. I think Roosevelt won because he's the people's friend."

Mrs. C. W. Tudor, 311 N street southwest, declared:

"Roosevelt won because he got more votes."

Max Leberknight, 3319 N street northwest, said:

"The people were satisfied with Roosevelt and what he's done the last four years. His election won't help me any. You never can tell what Landon might have done. It may have been better or it may have been worse. Whichever way it went won't make much difference to the common man."

Charles Matthews, taxi driver, said:

"It was a vote against Hoover, the same as 1932. The people never want to go back to the things Hoover stood for. The country realizes times have changed and that progress can come only through new ideas."

Bessie Schneider, 2436 Fourteenth street northwest, waitress:

"Roosevelt is the poor man's friend. He tried to help with relief; he put the country back on its feet. He's done a wonderful job and the people appreciate it."

New Hall for Houston.

Houston, Tex., Nov. 4 (AP).—Jesse H. Jones, Reconstruction Finance Corporation chairman, wielding a shiny new spade, broke the ground today on the site of the 1928 Democratic National Convention Hall. A $1,337,000 exposition hall, a PWA project, will be built on the site. It was in the old hall that Franklin D. Roosevelt nominated Alfred E. Smith for the Presidency in 1928.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

National Symphony Orchestra (Hans Kindler, conductor; Guiomar Novaes, piano soloist) in Constitution Hall Wednesday night. Program: Overture to "Euryanthe" (Weber), Symphony No. 4 in D minor (Schumann), Pianofort Concerto No. 4 in G major (Beethoven), Prelude to Act 1 of "Fervaal" (Vincent d'Indy), "Rakoczy March" from "La Damnation de Faust" (Berlioz).

A disagreeable drizzle did its best to detract attendance from the National Symphony Orchestra's first midweek concert of the season and succeeded to a certain extent, inasmuch as there were more vacant places in the hall than usual on parallel occasions. Nevertheless, cordiality was not wanting in the audience, which obviously enjoyed the thoroughly romantic program, rewarded the artistry of Guiomar Novaes with numerous recalls and gave Hans Kindler and his men ovational thanks at the close of the program.

While they have no deliberate intent to tease, conductors are ever and again dangling before us tantalizing overtures to operas which we seldom or never have the opportunity to hear. To be sure, an overture is better than no portion at all, but there remains a lurking dissatisfaction, a feeling of frustrated appetite. How many times has the door been opened upon Weber's "Eurythane," only to be closed in our faces just as we have become fully prepared for its Gothic atmosphere?

Rich and Glamorous.

This time, too, we looked down an enticing vista at Vincentd'Indy's "Fervaal," a Gallic cousin of Parsifal and Tristan. It was a lovely prospect indeed, an avenue irised with harmonic hues rich and glamorous. In the music of d'Indy are vague reminiscences of his master, Cesar Franck, and of his admired neighbor across the Rhine, Richard Wagner, yet these reflections are in no way suggestive of imitation. D'Indy's individuality is strongly pronounced; he has an idiom unmistakably his own, and a subtlety of expression quite idiosyncratic.

We can never be thankful enough to Schumann that he rewrote his second symphony and called it his fourth. Only those who heard it performed in 1841 know what it sounded like before the revision which turned it into his most impassioned speech in orchestral language. It certainly has now an authority, a power and an intense vehemence which no othre symphony of his possesses. One of the finest works of the romantic school, it has sweetness without cloying sentimentality, strength tempered with tenderness, and poesy threaded with intellectual strands. Among his works it occupies the dominant place that "Titan" does among the novels of his beloved Jean Paul.

Guiomar Novaes gave a refreshing reading of the Beethoven concerto in G major. Her technical ease, her clarity of tone, her union of poise and impulsive phrasing resulted in a performance of engrossing quality. Under her hands the beauties of the work lost none of their enchantment.

Tradition Explained.

Garrulous tradition, so fond of trying to explain music by pretty stories, says that in the slow movement Beethoven had in mind Orpheus pleading in the underworld for the return of Eurydice. Those who would like to have it that way can hear the poet's supplications in the lovely hushed phrases of the solo instrument and the Plutonian refusal in the unison passages for orchestra. But no program of this kind is necessary for the enjoyment of that incomparable dialogue.

Foreign Press Hails Landslide For Roosevelt

Blum Acclaims Victory as Triumph in Interest of Democratic Rule.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Nov. 4.—Socialist Premier Leon Blum tonight said the re-election of President Roosevelt "will be interpreted by the entire world as a success for democracy."

"I rejoice in the result of the election," he said, "first, because it keeps in power a man whose exceptional gifts of intelligence, courage and personality are admired everywhere, and, secondly, because his re-election will be interpreted by the entire world as a success for democracy.

"His re-election will prove to international opinion that a great flow of ideas in a free country can triumph over all obstacles whatever they may go."

"It (re-election) will bring hope and encouragement to international democracy because to the entire world President Roosevelt personifies with particular strength that ideal of justice towards which all free people and democratic government itself aim."

Expressing personal admiration for President Roosevelt, the Premier concluded: "All France rejoices today to see the American people with whom France felt herself allied through so many years show such earnest confidence in their own future and their own destiny."

Foreign officials and newspapers hailed with enthusiasm yesterday the landslide re-election of President Roosevelt.

In European nations where the press is controlled by authoritarian governments, editorial writers suggested the overwhelming New Deal vote might show a trend toward a single party system as in their own countries.

"Is this a democratic election? Or is it the eruption of the fuehrer (leader) idea within the Democratic system—achieved by Democratic methods?" asked the Berlin Tageblatt.

Our Electoral Formula.

Few can be ignorant of the fact that President Roosevelt has been granted a second term. It is not so generally realized that he will not be officially re-elected until January 6, 1937. On that day the Senate and House will solemnly meet in joint session and open the electoral ballots.

Even though the choice of a President and Vice President is actually made by the people, voting through State units, the formal procedure of an earlier day is still closely followed. In accord with the twelfth amendment to the Constitution, the electors will meet in their respective States on December 14. Their ballots will be officially cast according to instructions received at the polls, and, after sealing, will be forwarded to the President of the Senate.

The electoral college, of course, was originally designed to prevent the direct election of the President by the people. Some captious critics have found great delight, therefore, in declaring the present system unconstitutional and in challenging the Supreme Court to invalidate it. But in doing so they miss a point of real significance and wide applicability.

The procedure of choosing a President has not been changed, in any vital respect since the twelfth amendment was adopted, in 1804. In practice the people have always made the choice by superimposing the machinery of political parties upon that of the electoral system. That is in no way forbidden by the Constitution. Indeed, the original provision on this subject is to the effect that "each State shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress . . ."

When the electoral system was modified by the twelfth amendment, parties had already taken control of our political machinery. If the practice of instructing electors to vote for designated candidates had been inimical to the Constitution, Congress and the States would doubtless have forbidden it at that time. Instead, they simply laid down more specific rules for the casting of electoral ballots after the electors had been chosen.

This is a typical example of the way in which governmental machinery set up a century and a half ago has proved sufficiently flexible to serve the needs of the modern age. It is one reason why the burden of proof rests on those who argue that this flexibility is inadequate in other respects.

The Morning After.

Among the souvenirs that a certain battle-scarred veteran of the late fracas will not fondle lovingly in days to come are certain newspaper clippings.

There is, for instance, that little piece from the public prints of June 17, which is doubtless to be found in John D. M. Hamilton's extensive collection. Still smelling faintly of printer's ink, but deserving a lavender aroma, it reveals the chairman of the Republican National Committee as predicting:

"We are going to carry everything from Kansas straight eastward, Nebraska, Oklahoma, several of the Mountain States and two or possibly all of the Pacific States. Sentiment in the West is all afire for Landon and Knox . . ."

A week later these hopes soared higher. There is another clipping to recall the day when Mr. Hamilton said: "Gov. Landon will break into the Solid South. . . . It might happen that we will carry all 48 States. . . . The West is in the bag."

On November 1, Mr. Hamilton turned relatively cautious. He then declared that "My absolute minimum is 320 electoral votes for the Republican ticket." But the poor fellow was not allowed to retreat. The day before the election he announced that "I have had a flood of protests that my claim was too conservative." Perhaps the protests would have been more to the point if "too conservative" had been applied to the chairman rather than his claim.

Mr. Hamilton may take cold comfort from the probability that he will not be the last to let wishful thinking lead him a little beyond the very end of a thin and perilous limb. "Hope springs eternal in the human breast." But equally worthy as a text for amateur politicians is that which cries: "Oh, that mine adversary had written a book!"

Mr. Farley would doubtless agree that newspaper files serve just as well.

The Next Congress.

The most unexpected and certainly one of the most significant of the election results is the actual curtailment of that little block of 104 Republicans which carried the banner of the opposition in the last session of Congress. All the predictions took it for granted that this small minority would be strengthened, estimates from entirely objective observers granting the Republicans a gain of at least 50 seats.

Had these predictions been fulfilled the restoration of a hard-hitting and effective opposition would have been the outstanding characteristic of the next Congress. In fact the minority representation will be numerically even weaker than before and is likely to be further disorganized by the loss of such experienced leaders as Representatives Bolton and Lehlbach. The rout of most Republican senatorial candidates, reducing that party's representation in the upper house to a mere handful, emphasizes an unbalanced alignment which cannot be regarded as politically healthy.

It is not healthy, for one reason, because it is not representative. While the final tabulations will probably show that well over one-third of the electorate voted for the Republican Presidential candidate, the party strength in the next Congress will bear no proportion to this ratio. It appears that Republicans will be returned to a bare quarter of the seats in the House of Representatives and will be an even smaller fraction in the next Senate.

Other factors are more disquieting than the under-representation of G. O. P. voters. For success, parliamentary government depends in no small measure upon an effective opposition. It is the function of the minority party not to oppose blindly, but to criticize constructively, all legislation which the Administration seeks to enact.

Through this procedure shortcomings are made apparent before the passage of legislation and mistakes due to inadequate consideration or defective drafting are customarily eliminated in advance. A more effective opposition in the last Congress, to cite a single example, would have saved the Administration mistakes in the present social security legislation which it is now generally admitted will have to be rectified.

Indeed, an effective opposition is so essential to our system of government that if it did not exist it would have to be created. And the process of creation can only come about in one of two ways.

A political party which has been as thoroughly beaten as were the Republicans this week must either accept a permanently subordinate position or carefully examine its program and leadership to see where and for what reasons it has lost public confidence. In the procedure a lot of dead wood, both ideas and individuals, is pruned, with the result of eventual rejuvenation. If the basic ideas of the party are sound, and if it has leadership intelligent enough to adapt them to popular will and national needs, a smashing defeat may prove only a temporary and on the whole a salutary reverse.

Nothing the Republican Party can now do, however, will strengthen its position in the forthcoming Congress. Its certain weakness there is consequently likely to forward the other procedure through which an opposition is created. This is by cleavage in the top-heavy and all-powerful majority party. Such an outcome is the more probable in the case of a party containing many conflicting elements.

The extent to which right-wing Democrats will divide from left-wing Democrats, and the degree to which the Republican fragment can capitalize on that tendency, will of course depend in large measure on the temper and quality of Administration leadership. If this is cool, skillful and deliberate, disintegration will be held in abeyance. If leadership is hasty, provocative and autocratic, not even the patronage factor—of less importance, it may be hoped, in future—will keep the lines from breaking.

Thus we have the paradoxical situation that the very magnitude of the President's triumph will strengthen the challenge to his powers.

A Footnote From England.

In the municipal elections held in England and Wales this week, the British Labor Party gained 100 and lost 157 seats.

It is the first serious setback suffered by the party since recovery set in from the great slump in its fortunes in 1931. Then a total of 238 seats in the provincial borough councils were lost by the Laborites. But by 1933 the tide had set the other way and so flowed until the present test.

Various reasons are advanced for the present decline in Labor strength in the boroughs. It is no secret that the party is at the moment divided in its leadership and uncertain in its policies. In consequence it has lost the confidence of some of its erstwhile followers.

Another factor that may have been responsible for the reversal is the recently extensive purchase by workers, through building societies, of their own homes. As property owners and taxpayers they are now less inclined to indorse heavy municipal expenditures for social purposes.

In any case, the experience of the British Labor Party is symptomatic of one very salutary feature in democratic systems. There is nothing permanent about electoral majorities. A party which, like the Democratic Party this year or the Republicans in 1920, is the beneficiary of a landslide, cannot safely become complacent. Pride, for parties as for persons, precedes a fall.

A Maritime Mediation Board.

On Monday we suggested in these columns that maritime labor disturbances which have progressed from a chronic to an acute state of disorder call for the creation of some kind of arbitration machinery comparable to that set up by the Federal Government for the railroads.

It is the more gratifying to learn, therefore, that Assistant Secretary of Labor McGrady, who has labored so unceasingly to effect a settlement between the West Coast maritime unions and the shipping interests, has for some time been at work on a tentative bill setting up a maritime mediation board with duties analogous to those of the National Mediation Board provided by the railway labor act.

As an alternative plan, he suggests that the railway board might also be entrusted with control of the labor problems of water transportation. Probably the duties of a maritime mediation board would be sufficiently arduous and specialized in character to warrant creation of a new and separate agency. However, there is plenty of time for discussing the details of Mr. McGrady's proposals. The fact of chief importance is that efforts are under way to provide effective machinery in a field where it is obviously needed.

While action must be postponed until Congress convenes, it is desirable to give publicity to plans for dealing with future disturbances and to arouse support for an intelligent legislative program of action. Such discussions, moreover, may indirectly help to bring about a settlement of the present dispute.

When the principals realize that proposals are under way to empower Federal conciliators to intervene in the future, they may be more willing to accept the proffered aid of Federal officials who from a sense of responsibility are now endeavoring to put an end to a calamitous situation.

Too Much For Massachusetts.

Massachusetts seems to have a rule governing its attitude toward Gov. James M. Curley. The Bay Staters will elect him to almost any office at home, but they balk at inflicting him upon Washington. It is true that he served in Congress some years ago. That, however, may be the exception which proves the rule. Since then he has been defeated in campaigns for both the House and the Senate. This record is an amusing contrast to his three terms as Mayor of Boston, his numerous victories in State and municipal contests and the heavy vote he polled to become Governor two years ago.

It is possible, of course, that Mr. Curley's jinx merely happens to strike when he is running for Congress. For Massachusetts has a way of voting for him and then against him, as if it could stand only so much without a respite. In any event, Mr. Curley has now certainly caught the electorate in a vindictive mood. Voters went to the extreme of putting the Roosevelt landslide into reverse to block the Governor's path. That may mean the end of a cycle rather than merely one of its lower curves.

Henry Cabot Lodge, jr., seems to be the only Republican senatorial gain to emerge from Tuesday's deluge of Democratic votes. While the veteran Curley was yielding to this youthful opponent for a seat in the Senate already held by a Democrat, President Roosevelt was sweeping Massachusetts by a substantial majority. As he went down the skids to defeat, Mr. Curley had to face the rest of the Democratic slate moving upward. That is about as conclusive a way of telling a politician he is through as the electorate could find.

Observers who have followed Mr. Curley's career are more cheered than surprised by this outcome. The Governor has carried bossism to a point where it had become obnoxious even to those who were mildly amused by his vaudeville tactics in public office. Moreover, this seems to be a bad year for demagogues, as the fate of Mr. Lemke and the somewhat less reverent Father Coughlin also proves.

When real issues are at stake, would-be dictators and political charlatans may expect to be crushed between the interests of the major groups. That trend in the election gives cause for universal satisfaction.

In Germany candy is being made of coal tar. A problem soon to face physicians over there will be what to do for a 5-year-old with a macadamized stomach.

Desire To Be First.

From the San Francisco Chronicle.

Of the more than 1,100 persons who have applied for transpacific passage in clipper plane voyages over 400 want to go on the first passenger flight. While we speak of the herd instinct of human nature, there is also an instinct to step out ahead of the herd—an instinct to be first. This competitive instinct is what makes for progress in the world. If it were not for this counterpoint to the herd instinct we would have a static civilization.

But as in sport, so in adventure, there is a secondary degree. As most of us take our sports vicariously, so do most of us take our adventure vicariously. Those who would be the first passengers on the clipper ships are doubtless adventurous spirits, but of the second degree. They, of course, will get a thrill, and whatever the means of selection of the seven first passengers to be carried, they will get an adventitious glory—something to tell their grandchildren.

Peace And Prosperity.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For a peace advocate to eloquently portray the horrors of war without using his influence toward the prevention of war is as inane as it would be for a fireman to be eloquently declaiming about fire losses when he should be helping to put out the fire which was consuming a neighboring building.

The chief causes of international war may be stated as follows: (1) The artificial scarcity of land due to bad taxation, which has the double effect of impoverishing the masses by throwing millions of men out of employment and providing inadequate wages for those who work and also of giving nations the excuse for taking land by force of arms. When men are deprived of "the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," they have little to lose by conflict and are easily led to believe that they may have something to gain thereby. (2) Tariff walls between nations also have the effect of impoverishing the people by destroying commerce, and this leads to economic warfare, international prejudice and ill will, which in turn lead to strife.

Conversely, prosperity is the strongest of all factors for peace, and the intelligent advocate will concentrate his efforts to secure a condition of prosperity. When men have a comfortable condition of life, with good incomes and substantial property interest, they are not easily inclined to strife. They have every reason to desire peace and to be on good-natured terms with the rest of the world.

The Post In The Campaign.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Now that the campaign is over, I want to compliment you on the contents and management of The Post during the campaign period.

The articles by your special writers were quite uniformly logical, reasonable and informing. I particularly commend the substance and character of the editorials. They were clear, exceptionally well written and logically convincing. Of course, I could not agree with all that your special writers said because they expressed different opinions. Nor were the editorial opinions always in accordance with my views, but nevertheless, I desire to bear witness to an able, conscientious handling of a tremendously important campaign.

The Fireman's Life.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I would like to ask Mr. Smokey Joe, who writes in The Post of November 1, why he does not publish the unpleasant side of a fireman's job. For instance, it is true that we sleep at night except when we are on watch if the bell is quiet, but he doesn't say that the greatest cause for retirement is the bell that knocks you awake instantly and causes a strain on your nerves which eventually affects your heart so that after about 25 years you are through.

As long as he did not sign his name I cannot tell what house he is in, but he evidently has a very lenient captain. Personally, I do not have the leisure that he does. I have to keep plugging at boxes, routes, hydrants, short streets, hazardous buildings, names and uses of appliances and numerous other things in order to feel that my job is safe and also because it is orders. If Mr. Smokey Joe sees fit to belittle his own job he had better tell both sides or keep quiet.

Religious Freedom.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: After 25 years of mature thought, I have come to the conclusion that there is not a government in the world, to my knowledge, perfect enough, that is, cognizant and jealous of its prerogatives, to deserve the protection of God to perpetuate its existence, or not to need purgation. Is a man permitted to make such a sweeping statement? In reply we quote from an old American grammar, the saying: "A soul is greater than a State."

One of my principal reasons for the above conclusion is, that, not even France, America nor yet Soviet Russia (each in its own way claiming to be a champion of human liberty) has made f r e e d o m of religion a fact, or practicable. Mere freedom of church organizations to say or do things by virtue of their organized power or prestige is no credit to a government; and, as to the individual's freedom, that is conditioned by his financial independence. No matter how advanced a soul, how much more intelligent than the rest, he gets no protection from any government so that he may utter his thoughts, without jeopardizing his source of income.

When these defects are corrected, then we shall be ready to pray that God might preserve churches, governments or other human institutions. And why should we not recognize these factors and remedy those evils which tend to perpetuate national and international problems as the only way to compel the human race to mend its ways?

On Saluting The Flag.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A news item from Oxen Hill, Md., in The Post of October 19 stated that two parents there objected to having their six children salute the school flag. As a consequence the school board declined to receive the children as pupils. The parental objection was said to be for religious reasons. The mother is reported to have said: "Our only objection is to worshiping the flag." These parents are wholly mistaken. Neither the Nation, State nor any school board asks any one to worship the flag. To salute the flag is not to worship it, but to honor it and to be loyal to the Nation symbolized by the red, white and blue.

In the Bible we are told many times to salute persons and churches but never to salute God. In the last chapter of Paul's letter to the Romans there are no less than 18 salutations to persons and churches. As the parents made it a religious issue, they should read their Bible and see that they err in confusing saluting the flag with worshiping it. Their plain duty is to see that their children salute the flag and attend the public school as other children are doing. It is very fitting and eminently proper for all school boards to require saluting the flag as a condition for attending the school. We should remember the words in I Peter 2:7, "Fear God and Honor the King." This means in our beloved republic: Worship God and salute the flag.

Written A Day Too Soon.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The tinsel departs in November, the abundance of life, of reproduction, remains.

The sunflower ever turns toward the light, stores up energy, provides food in abundance for God's creatures, and in November bows before the author of life because it is a finished product.

Where there had been one sunflower, now there can be a hundred. It towers above the other flowers of garden and field. It never disappoints. Quite a fitting symbol of tried and true Republicanism, which through decades has brought the United States to greatness.

The "Election-Cake" Tradition.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: According to a press dispatch sent from Springfield, Ill., under date of November 7, 1860, "there was very little sleeping done in this place last night" for the reason as the dispatch continues to say, "the scenes and noises, between the closing of the polls yesterday and sunrise today, defy description." The cause of this hilarity upon the part of the people of Springfield (and doubtless of many other communities the country over) was, of course, interest felt in the outcome of the Presidential election which had just been held. And, the chances are, there was very little sleeping done in thousands of communities throughout the United States on Tuesday night as a result of the intense interest felt in the outcome of the current national Presidential and other elections.

Whether knowingly or not, the people of today are taking a cue from the people of colonial New England, in the extent to which they are now making of election "watch nights" the occasion for dinners, dances, other pleasurable social incidents to the "getting of election returns." While elections in New England, in the early days, were largely a matter of form, the Governor and other dignitaries being designated rather than elected, prior to the Revolution, yet these people made much ado over "Election Day," and planned for it along picturesque lines far in advance of the occasion.

For the colonists, this term had reference to the day on which the new Governor took his seat. For those who did things according "to Hoyle" this meant their participation in scenes of high carnival, and to an extent equal almost to that observed in connection with Christmas, Thanksgiving Day, the Fourth of July and other religious and patriotic occasions.

Induction of the Governor into office in New England was accompanied by much of "pomp and ceremony." This meant that prior to the big occasion housewives outdid themselves in the preparation of great quantities of food of much variety and conceded quality. Despite the fact the Puritans acknowledged no professed public amusements yet they were not slow in recognizing the place which "cakes and ale" played in the promotion of any outstanding social or political occasion.

Outstanding among foods prepared for Election Day festivities was that "most awfully sacred election-cake," an interesting institution of the times. Plans for the making of this momentous contribution to the general good cheer, we are told, were marked by mysterious whisperings and intense interest to the end the "election-cake" be all that tradition demanded of it. Some of the families, it is commented, may have been willing and did leave to old and trusted colored retainers the task of making this necessary adjunct to the success of Election Day observance, but this was not so to many of the others. A few also possibly might be willing to leave it to the ministrations of such as "Aunt" Nancy Prime, famed in that section for making "election-cake and ginger pop."

With some families, none other than someone within the very inner circle of the domestic group, could possibly be entrusted with the recipe for "their election cake," it being the boast of different ones of these families it had "been in the family for 100 years." Then, there was one "Polly," a white retainer of an old and distinguished family, who had been constituted the "sacred ark and tabernacle" in which resided "that divine secret of the making of election-cake," in keeping with the family tradition. All of which tended to make Polly an autocrat. So far as the kitchen was concerned, she refused even to let her mistress step into it while she was "composing her mind for this serious work."

The Post Impressionist

Male Comeback.

LAST week there bowed to the world on the historic boards of the National Theater a play called "Plumes in the Dust." It was written by Miss Sophie Treadwell and it starred Mr. Henry Hull. With excellence Mr. Hull appeared as Edgar Allan Poe, carrying the poet through vignettes of his tragic life. The play is Mr. Hull's—in the recreation of incident, in the expression of a strange genius, in the acknowledgment of the women in Poe's life. And the women are subordinate.

Not long ago Washington saw another play at the National called "St. Helena." This play, written jointly by a French lady and an Englishman, suffered a laborious birth and an anxious infancy at the "Old Vic" in London—until Mr. Winston Churchill discovered the excellence of it and said so. After that things went deservedly more easily.

Both "Plumes in the Dust" and "St. Helena" have undeniable worth, literary and historical. In the latter, Mr. Sherriff of England has taken care to show that the British officials and soldiers who found themselves the unwilling custodians of a recalcitrant French emperor were on the whole considerate. Miss de Casalis of France has exerted equal care in convincing spectators that the exile was thoroughly human. The result is a fine display of slow decay and somber disintegration.

* * *

But beyond literary or historical importance it seems, in looking back, that there is an additional significance not recorded in the actual script of either of these plays. There is one principal character in each, and both characters are men. Both are bitter, Poe at destroying himself, Napoleon at being destroyed by his enemies. Mr. Maurice Evans, who played Napoleon, had as difficult a part as Mr. Hull. Both actors were on the stage almost constantly, both actors were stars.

In the cast of "Plumes in the Dust" the women who loved Poe appear merely as satellites, almost bewildered. In "St. Helena" the women have still more minor parts. Their function is to see that the French race does not die on the island, to let the former emperor cheat them at cards, and to dress for dinner. None, apparently, were difficult feats. Very definitely each of these dramas was written for a single male star.

Has the importance of the ladies begun to wane? Or are they merely willing to concede a sound play to a man? For years the actress has been the soul of the American theater. She has appeared in all her varied moods, running the gamut in the past few years from Nazimova as the stolid O-lan in "The Good Earth" to Ina Claire in silken drawing rooms and tomorrow afternoon's tea-gown. It is true that she has her "leading man" and sometimes a male co-star. But even then the lady's part has customarily been richer than the man's. Wang Lung's wisdom in "The Good Earth" as a novel became his wife's wisdom on the stage. Is this because producers have always believed the public prefers watching the female of the species? Does the public?

* * *

To name only a few, the theater of the not too long gone past has given the world the Ladies Bernhardt, Terry, Duse and Barrymore. It has produced its Mansfields, its Irvings and its Hampdens, too. Shining brightly in the theater of the present are the Ladies Cornell, Hayes, Claire, Cowl, Bankhead, Fontanne and others. From the cinema now and then the Ladies Hepburn, Sullavan and others come to face the footlights. Today's public, realizing the excellence of such actresses, applauds. But who long remembers the steady, reliable actors who played "opposite."

There is a long list of these actors, and now that the theater once more appears to be viewing a pink cloud on its horizon it may be assumed that this list will grow. Some will doubtless return from the screen. But will the plays they are given present them the opportunity of becoming Mansfields and Irvings and Hampdens? Or will a majority of their names continue to appear far down on theater programs, not in capital letters? Last year Mr. Evans was not a star. And his status next year probably will depend upon the play he gets.

The public naturally applauds the Messrs. Huston, Hull, Merrivale, Lunt and others. Occasionally such applause recognizes a Burgess Meredith. And when they break away from the films to do a play the Messrs. Howard, Ahearn, Rathbone, Barrymore (the latter not really of late) take their curtains. Yet in more cases than not these gentlemen share their stellar honors, for the ladies still outnumber the men who star in their own right. And the type of play has a lot to do with that.

* * *

"Plumes in the Dust" and "St. Helena" indicate that there can be opportunities for men. History is rather largely made by men, and so is a good part of literature. The Victorias, the Elizabeths and the Joans of Arc will always find their place in the theatrical sun. That is as it should be. But what of the men? On Friday of this week Mr. Hull bows to New York as Poe. New York has already received Maurice Evans as Bonaparte. Already he has presented his Napoleon over the radio as a "guest artist."

Are there others, and does this mean the beginning of a trend that will not eclipse the ladies but that will bring the men to a deserved theatrical importance they have too easily abandoned?

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Farley Was Right.

TRUE TO Mr. Farley's predictions, it was a dirty campaign, and, for a startling novelty in American politics, the lowest fouls of all were struck by a clerical dictator, identified by his Bishop as the Voice of God, who called the President the anti-God and Cabinet members dogs, threatened to tear a man's heart out, counseled civil war, denounced the money changers while changing money with both hands and wrapped the vestments of his office about him as immunity from criticism much more sober than his own.

Father Coughlin was too hot for either major party to handle, and some papers, too, although he constantly resented their timid exceptions to his more brutal explosions, were unable to go to the gutter and fight him on his home grounds.

For one thing the papers were restrained by tradition and the cramping limitations of the law of libel, whereas Coughlin made his own traditions as he went along and took full advantage of the knowledge that no prudent man would sue him.

• • • •

Libel has come to be a spook at the elbow of every newspaper owner, clanking its chain and pointing a scrawny finger of doubt and fear at every expression of robust truth or opinion which might be challenged in court, for a paper cannot win the costs of a libel suit even though it win the jury's verdict.

The costs of defense have made libel a plaintiff's racket and a serious handicap to honest journalism, but the demagogue is courtproof and takes liberties with truth, decency and privilege which would put a newspaper owner in the poor-house, to say nothing of the dog-house and the county jail.

Father Coughlin seemed incoherent toward the end when he denounced the Administration of James A. Farley for atheistic communism and, at the same time, promised to protect the Jews from the Hitlerism of the same administration.

Those of us who spent some time at the ringside during the era of wonderful nonsense recognized in his technique an adaptation of the "Oop, sorry," or Gentleman Jim style of fighting. Under this method a crafty fighter sticks his thumb in his opponent's eye and rowels it around until the eye is useless or hits him low or rakes a wounded eyebrow with the laces of the glove and then steps back with a low ostentatious bow of apology. The victim wins one point on the referee's chart, but the damage is done, and your Gentleman Jim stands back to box him fancy until the next chance offers to gouge an eye or give him the heel or knee. He then offers another apology.

• • •

Father Coughlin has repented several fouls in this campaign—a strange, unwonted language for the Voice of God, which never took back when he spoke for himself, but like various Gentleman Jims of the prize-ght trade, Couglin got his results in the first place, and when he said, "Oop, sorry," the dirt had been done, according to his original intention.

I doubt that I am the only one who thought, when he spoke of the anti-God and bullets in the same address, that he would have been much more manly if he had made a personal attempt to assassinate the President of the United States. That oration, considering his cloth and the influence thereof, struck me as a dangerous suggestion to any slobbering imbecil within sound of his voice that God would cheerfully indorse a violation of a rather important commandment.

If a man wants assassination done the way to do is to do it himself, knowing that he must die, not appeal to the fanaticism of some mental defective among the audience of millions who sees angels and hears voices in the night.

Aye, and it has been a dirty campaign as predicted by Shamus Farley, the Catholic atheist genius of the Communist administration which would introduct Hitlerism but for the intervention of the dictator who attacks with a ball bat and a cleaver in God's name and hollers "Bigotry!" at those who do not turn the other cheek.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

Pumping Stations And First Aid.

It is suggested by a New York surgeon that gasoline pumping stations all over the country be equipped with stretchers, first-aid kits, etc., and made emergency Red Cross stations.

• • • •

That gives you an idea how little headway the Safety First posters are making.

• • • •

The surgeon, Dr. Byron Stookey, of the New York Neurological Institute, says the problem is not so much how to cut down accidents as how to take care of the people who have been cut down.

• • • •

He would put a stretcher, some splints and the usual emergency equipment in every gas station, and train the attendants in the rudiments of first aid to the battered.

• • • •

The idea has its good points. It would at least assure the victim's being picked up before another car ran over him.

• • • •

It is his suggestion that the slogan, "Buy at a gas station equipped for first aid!" be adopted and displayed. Okay, but every autoist will hope that the gasoline producers, if they underwrite the stretchers, make them all one color.

• • • •

You can imagine the influence on gas station signs:

"Free Air and Stretchers."

"Gas, 18 cents a gallon. Try Our High Test Adhesive Tape."

"Our Attendants Make Temporary Repairs to Cars and Passengers."

"How Are You Fixed for Oil, Air and Restoratives?"

• • • •

The attendant will, of course, rush out and inquire whether you wish gas, oil, air or sedatives.

• • • •

He will offer to pump up your tires, bandage your leg or send a telegram to your relatives

• • • •

And there will always be the assistant hustling around with that old rag and expressing a willingness to rub off your windshield even if you have just been pitched through it.

• • • •

It will seem a little strange at first to call a pumping station proprietor "Doctor."

• • • •

Yours is a novel idea, Dr. Stookey. Yes, indeedy! But it is to be hoped that the pumping station men will be careful when a victim is rushed in for a dose of restoratives and not inquire, "Shall I fill 'er up?"

And It's the Same Every Four Years, Too.

Here we are with the election over and somehow or other life still has its problems and heartaches.

A telegraph company now allows you to add "Love" to any telegram without charge. If that isn't encouraging the free love movement, what is?

Whatever became of Mr. Lemke?

Now that the election is over how strangely still everything seems, even when there is a good deal of normal noise going on.

Europe Divided

While Democratic Nations Are Doing Nothing To Strengthen Ties, Position Of Fascist Powers Is Being Strengthened.

By Smith Simpson.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

WHEN ANTHONY EDEN and Leon Blum went to the session of the League of Nations Assembly last month they both made an unusual effort to assure everyone concerned that it was not the intention of the two largest democratic parties in Europe to form any kind of a bloc against Fascist countries. Their conduct was as good as their words. They did nothing at that time, nor have they done anything since, to strengthen the ties of democratic countries. But the Fascist-democratic division is spreading rapidly in Europe and, together with the rapid rearmament of Europe, is beginning to offer an immediate and portentous danger to existing democratic institutions, both national and international.

In Belgium not only has the Vane Zeeland government been threatened with dissolution by recent Fascist developments, but the unity of the Belgian nation as well. Belgium is, in reality, not one nation but two nations. Like another small nation in Europe—Switzerland—Belgium has no single, pervading national character. It is made of two quite different national extractions: Walloon and Flemish. The Walloons are of French extraction; the Flemish, of Teutonic. The official Belgian language is French, but the Flemish are permitted the use of their own language—a German dialect—in their schools and other public institutions. The divisions which this dual nationality of Belgium have produced in the past are, however, next to nothing beside the new and more bitter divisions which are now occurring between the Fascists and the Liberals.

Behind the recent declaration of the Belgian king of the intention of his country to return to its prewar policy of neutrality in international affairs is the story of the rapidly increasing seriousness of the Fascist-Liberal conflict. In the camps of the Fascists are the avowedly and newly organized Fascist groups, the "Rexists," and the nationalist groups of long standing, such as the Catholic Flemings, the Flemish Nationalists and the Christian Democrats. In the opposing group are the Liberal, Socialist, and Communist groups. That the conflict is becoming a widely accepted battle between Fascists on the one hand and the Liberals on the other is attested by the rapid identification with one or the other side of groups which have for some time demanded a dictatorship in Belgium and groups which have always stood for a perpetuation of Belgium's parliament with its wide powers in national and international matters.

Moseley's Move Arouses British.

IF THE SITUATION in Britain is not as alarming as that in Belgium, it is nonetheless suggestive of the dangers to which democratic countries in the European area now find themselves increasingly subjected. Open violence has been recently averted in London, the British citadel of the law and order for centuries, only by quick police action. Though violence has been thus temporarily averted in London, feeling is running high in the chief centers of Jewish population in England, where recent Fascist demonstrations have suddenly brought to public attention the nation-wide and systematic efforts of Sir Oswald Moseley's Fascist party to foment racial feeling and strife throughout the length and breadth of Britain.

Reports have reached this country frequently in the last few weeks of treatment of Jewish school children in schools in the East End districts of London at the hands of classmates and the British government has felt enough concern about this to request of its education officers a detailed report. Such action, however, is felt by labor leaders in Britain, whose unions would be the first to suffer from the success of the Moseley movement, to be inadequate, and the situation has been the cause of a deputation of labor leaders spending an hour with Sir John Simon, the home secretary, on October 21, with the result that Sir John promised drastic action as soon as Parliament reassembles next week.

The largest centers of Jewish population in England are in the East End of London, Leeds and Manchester, and it may be expected that the plans of Sir John will include special precautions against further Fascist demonstrations in these areas.

In England this past summer the growing noisiness and boldness of the Fascist group was widely commented on. I made an effort to find out what this meant. Was it a sign of increasing strength on the part of the Fascists? Or was it a sign, perhaps, that they needed public demonstrations to stay the morale of wavering members, to attract new members and to acquire "prestige?" I coud find no answer to these questions which I was willing to accept as accurate. Figures of membership cited by the Mosleyites are greatly exaggerated. Nevertheless, certain information which I obtained led me to believe that the number of Fascists in Britain have increased considerably during the three-year interval since 1933.

That circumstances in Europe are compelling a certain segment of the British population to play into the hands of advocates of nationalism, whether such advocates be Fescists or arch Conservatives, cannot be doubted. Such nationalists are demanding, among other things, that Britain become armed to the teeth as a protection against Hitler's vast aviation and military forces, and this situation is a good illustration of what an advantage nationalists now have in Britain because of the international situation.

In order to meet the threat of Hitler, the British Government has mapped a program of rearmament so vast that all of Britain's munitions industry cannot keep up with it and a report has recently been issued to the press by the British Government that the resources of the American aircraft industry will be enlisted, subject to the approval of the American Government, to assist in the manufacture of war planes and aviation supplies.

This rearmament program enjoys widespread approval from the British people. So great is Britain's scare over the powerful armament of Germany that not even the Labor Party leaders have been able to develop any program of opposition to the Conservative government's proposals. Side by side with this impotence of labor leaders, in the face of growing armament, is the impotence of the once-powerful League of Nations Union of Great Britain.

Italo-German Accord Indicative of Trend.

SINCE the failure of sanctions against Italy in its recent war upon Ethiopia, a policy which the union supported to the bitter end, the union has lost the greater part of its membership, the leadership of many men of affairs like Sir Austen Chamberlain, and the funds on which it has heretofore depended for its large-scale activities have dwindled almost to nothing.

It is now faded by the prospect of dissolution. Together with the failure of labor leaders to effectively oppose rearmament, the present situation of the League of Nations Union leaves the erstwhile battleground almost exclusively to the champions of nationalism, and it can well be that it will find more ready soil in which to grow in the remaining months of 1936 and in 1937 than at any other time since the World War.

Closer ties between Germany and Italy in order that the cause of fascism might reap the full benefit of the fascist-liberal divisions in such democratic countries as Belgium and Great Britain as well as the recent victories of fascist policy in Africa and Spain may be expected to develop apace in consequence of the recently concluded Italo-German agreement.

Since the retirement of Nicolas Titulescu as foreign minister of Rumania through the personal intervention of King Carol and the elevation of Victor Antonescu to that position, the government of Rumania has been shaping a policy which becomes more and more akin to Fascist policy, with all its anti-Semitic, nationalist and dictatorial features.

The most recent news which throws light on this is the issuance by the Rumanian government of free railway tickets to members of the Jorga-Cuza anti-Semitic groups, which are holding a congress in Bucharest on November 8 and the visit of Premier George Tatarescu of Rumania to Belgrade with proposals to the Yugoslav government that the Little Entente be superseded with an alliance with Germany, or at least an alliance of Rumania, Yugoslavia and Bulgaria dominated by Germany.

Should the Yugoslav government acquiesce in such a proposal, the influence of France in the Balkans would be replaced by the "protective border" of which Hitler now dreams, and this event would go far to place the Fascist powers in Europe in a diplomatic and economic position, which might cause permanent changes in the foreign policies, and perhaps even in the national institutions of all democratic countries, wherever they may be located in the world.

The World And Roosevelt's Victory.

THAT THE SWEEPING victory of President Roosevelt at the polls will have a vital bearing on developments within this country is, of course, taken for granted. But, at the same time, it must not be forgotten that the influence of last Tuesday's plebiscite will also be felt in practically every corner of the outside world.

At first glance this seems far-fetched. More than ever nations appear determined to live their own lives regardless of what is going on elsewhere, to retreat within the shell of their respective frontiers, somehow to insulate themselves against the shock of world events.

This urge has, in our day, assumed protean forms. It has been reflected in such varied and seemingly unrelated developments as the decision of Belgium to revert to the status of neutral; in the appointment of Gen. Hermann Goering as economic dictator of the Third Reich; in the rearmament program of the peaceful and highly civilized Scandinavian nations; in our refusal to join the World Court and in many other ways. The process has undoubtedly been accelerated by the weakening of the League of Nations—the most concrete expression of the international principle—in consequence of the failure of the first attempt in history to secure peace through collective action.

And yet the centripetal forces in the world are in actual fact more powerful than the centrifugal. The world is becoming one crowded neighborhood. What happens in one household, though its doors are bolted and barred, is quickly known in all others, regardless of whether their windows are hermetically sealed. What happens anywhere sooner or later is bound to have a bearing on what happens everywhere else. This has, in a measure, been true for a long time. It is more true now than ever before.

SOON AFTER the Russian revolution of November, 1917, Bolshevik ideas and Bolshevik technique began to be taken over by individuals and groups in other lands, indeed, by some who used the weapons forged by Lenin and his collaborators against the Communists.

It is taking an incredibly naive view to imagine, as so many do, that the Communist movement outside of Russia was purely the creation of Russian agents and "Russian gold." There were such agents, but their role, at most, was supplementary. The example set by Russia and those who had captured the machinery of power in Russia was enough.

Certainly it did not take French agents to let loose in Germany, Hungary, Poland, Italy of 1848 that wave of revolutions which swept the European continent. It was enough that revolution had broken out in Paris to give the Mazzinis and the Kossuths their cue to follow suit. It was through no action of Mussolini (who himself borrowed much of his technique from Lenin and Trotzky) that in the years after 1922 Europe had a rash of colored shirt movements; the latter was the inevitable consequence of the success achieved by Mussolini as the head and front of a movement which, in Italy, had successfully capitalized disillusionment with democracy and hatred of communism or what could be labeled as such.

The more recent of would-be dictators, such as Sir Oswald Mosley, look to Berlin rather than Rome for inspiration. But in doing so they have only added the newer Nazi emblem to the still fashionable Fascist shirt. That same borrowing process has most recently been manifested in the establishment of united fronts in countries where democratic elements feel their nations are in danger of fascism. Tried with success in France, where the united front has neutralized the nascent danger of French fascism, it was not long before the plan began to be imitated in other lands.

WHAT, THEN, of Roosevelt's victory?

The pull which the United States exerts on the world is enormous, even if this great fact is little understood and all too often ignored by the American people themselves. But it is a fact which is never denied and never minimized by the rest of the world. That is why Tuesday's election was followed with such breathless interest by nations geographically remote from us. For they realized that what was happening in the United States was of vital concern to them and to the rest of the world.

They realize, if we do not, that the grave economic, political and social problems facing our Nation may differ in degree, but do not differ in kind from those facing them. The New Deal, it seems to them, is one answer to the question universally asked, namely, whether existing political institutions can peacefully be adapted to meet the economic crisis and the social evils arising out of it.

That question had been asked in Italy in 1922 and in Germany in 1933; in both cases, the reply was in the negative. It was being answered negatively in other nations of the world; so much so that it seemed to many that democracy was doomed everywhere. Then came Roosevelt and the New Deal.

To outsiders, if not to us, the success of the United States in retaining its democratic institutions while re-orienting its political life to meet the changing economic and social needs of the times, has been patent. The better informed among them saw, as millions in this country realize, that the effort was not infrequently clumsy, the expense excessive, the means sometimes ill-considered, or carried out with dangerous light-heartedness. But the reanimation of the democratic spirit which this process of trial and error produced seemed to them worth all the costs. And now the American people themselves have overwhelmingly returned a similar verdict.

There will be many who will argue, as many have done, that the New Deal and the revival of prosperity in the United States have had only a coincidental relationship to each other. But the important thing, from the viewpoint of the world, is that the relationship nonetheless exists; that there has been a revival here that was not accompanied by dictatorship; on the contrary, that it has taken place in a setting of freedom.

So far as the outside world is concerned, American democracy has been tried in balance and not found wanting. And to all the peoples of the world living under dictatorships or faced with the choice of exchanging liberty for security (false as that security may ultimately prove to be) the Roosevelt victory is a beacon of hope.

The Best Plays

By William Lyon Phelps

Perennial Edition.

About this time every year appears a volume edited by Burns Mantle, which is not only interesting and valuable in itself, but is absolutely indispensable for those who wish to follow the contemporary American theater.

Some years ago it occurred to Mr. Burns Mantle that it would be a good idea to publish a record of the theatrical productions of the previous year, and his initial volume was received by the public with such favor that he has made it an annual; hence this volume is the eighteenth.

Like its predecessors, it is published by Dodd Mead & Co., New York.

Now, last year, the season of 1935-1936, was the best in the entire history of the metropolitan stage; so that Mr. Mantle very justly says that, instead of having any difficulty in completing his list of ten, his greatest difficulty was in being obliged to omit some plays that in any other season would certainly have been chosen. His list is as follows:

Winterset.	Boy Meets Girl.
Idiot's Delight.	Dead End.
End of Summer.	Call It a Day.
First Lady.	Ethan Frome.
Victoria Regina.	Pride and Prejudice.

Of these, Numbers 2, 5, 6 and 7 are still running in New York, while 4 and 6, I believe, are on the road.

Roosevelt Tide Sweeps 25 Into Governorships

G. O. P. Captures 3 States; Three Still Uncertain With Races Close.

By the Associated Press.

Borne along on the crest of the New Deal victory wave, at least 25 Democratic gubernatorial nominees were certain of election last night and two others held substantial leads over Republican opponents.

Walter Huxman, Democrat—In the home State of Gov. Alfred M. Landon—was victorious over Republican will G. West.

Another Republican governorship, Michigan's fell before Frank Murphy, Democrat, who came back from the Philippines where he is American High Commissioner, to do battle with Gov. Frank Fitzgerald.

Of the 33 governorships at stake this year, Democrats took at least 25, Republicans 3, Progressives 1, Farmer-Laborites 1, with 3 remaining uncertain. With 11 Democratic governorships not at stake in Tuesday's election, the party is assured at least 36 Democratic governors at the beginning of the new year.

Democratic Roll Call.

Democratic Governors were elected in Arkansas, Arizona, Connecticut, Delaware, Indiana, Tennessee, Florida, Illinois, Massachusetts, Kansas, Missouri, Michigan, New Mexico, Nebraska, New York, North Carolina, Texas, Georgia, Rhode Island, Idaho, Ohio, Washington, West Virginia, Colorado and Utah. Democratic nominees were running ahead in Montana and Iowa.

Republicans were elected in South Dakota, New Hampshire and Vermont and were running ahead in North Dakota.

Gov. Philip La Follette was re-elected as a Progressive in Wisconsin, and Elmer Benson, Farmer-Laborite, unopposed by a Democrat, defeated his Republican opponent in Minnesota.

The victory of Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York over his Republican opponent, William F. Bleakley, attracted Nation-wide attention. Before the Democratic National Convention Lehman said he would quit public office. He changed his mind after White House and party pressure was brought to bear. He defeated Bleakley by more than a half million votes, but trailed far behind President Roosevelt.

Cross Breaks Record.

The victory of Gov. Wilbur Cross of Connecticut over Republican Arthur M. Brown, State's attorney, chalked up a new Nutmeg State record. Two years ago Cross became the first Democrat ever to be elected three times successively. He is now the first Connecticut Governor since the Civil War to win more than three terms.

In South Dakota the Democratic incumbent, Gov. Tom Berry, conceded victory to Leslie Jensen, Republican. In North Dakota, Gov. Walter Welford, Republican, held the edge over John Moses, his Democratic opponent.

In Delaware, now under a Republican Governor, there was a turnover, with Richard G. McMullen, Democratic nominee, winning over Republican Harry L. Cannon.

Two other governorships were settled earlier in the year. Louisiana elected a Democratic Governor, Richard W. Leche, whose four-year term began in May. Maine elected a Republican Governor, Lewis O. Barrows, to suceeed Gov. Louis Brann, Democrat, next January.

Dog Training on Quail Declared Within Law

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., Nov. 4.—In the personal opinion of Max D. Hart, executive secretary of the State Commission on Game and Inland Fisheries, sportsmen may train their dogs on quail without breaking the law provided they carry no firearms.

The opinion, given in reply to an inquiry from a local sportsman, was rendered after a warning from the game warden, F. W. Purgley, regarding the closed season in Frederick County on quail and a request that coveys be not scattered by dogs.

Post-Mortems

Seattle, Nov. 4 (AP). — The late Marion A. Zioncheck's successor in Congress will be Warren G. Magnuson, orphaned as a boy, blond, handsome, 31, and a former ice wagon driver.

Magnuson is regarded as one of the Democratic veterans of the First Congressional District, comprising the city of Seattle and Kitsap County.

He came here from Moorhead, Minn., when he was 17.

He worked his way through the University of Washington law school by driving an ice wagon.

Zioncheck filed for re-election, but a few days later leaped five stories to his death from a downtown building.

Jersey City, N. J., Nov. 4 (AP).—Jacob Maged, tailor who went to jail for undercutting NRA prices, telegraphed to President Roosevelt the hope that he would restore the NRA.

"Business is bad," explained the man who charged 35 cents for pressing a suit when the code said he should take 40. "Only the NRA can restore it."

He expressed his hope in a telegram to President Roosevelt at Hyde Park, N. Y.

Maged was prosecuted under a State NRA compliance act and was sentenced to jail. He spent only two days there, however, before an attorney got him out.

President Roosevelt will come back to the White House in excellent physical trim.

Such is the verdict of Dr. Ross McIntire, White House physician.

There may be a few more seams in the face and a bit more gray at the temples of the 54-year-old Chief Executive, but otherwise he appears about the same as the day in March, 1933, when he took office.

• • • •

Reno, Nev., Nov. 4 (AP).—Declaring Nevada is the Nation's "only sound State," Julian T. Bishop, New York stock broker, said today that as a result of the re-election of President Franklin D. Roosevelt he would move to this State and dispose of his interests in the East, including a quail farm in North Carolina.

The broker, who has been living on a guest ranch here for some time with his wife, the former Mrs. Emilie Kennedy, said he would make his home in Nevada because "the State's budget is balanced and there are no nuisance taxes."

He had previously declared he would move to Canada in the event of a New Deal victory in yesterday's election.

• • • •

Sulphur, Okla., Nov. 4 (AP).— petition was being circulated in Murray County tonight asking that the county's name be changed to Roosevelt.

The county was named for William H. (Alfalfa Bill) Murray, president of the constitutional convention in 1907.

Murray, a former Democratic Governor, now is a New Deal critic.

Murray County voted overwhelmingly for Roosevelt yesterday. County officials sponsored the petition.

"It was my idea to name the county after Roosevelt," said John Henry Santles, Murray County court clerk.

• • • •

Springfield, Ohio, Nov. 4 (AP).—Arthur W. Aleshire, of Clark County, a paralytic victim who conducted his campaign from a wheel-chair, stood out today as the first Democrat ever elected to the National Congress from the Seventh Ohio District as it is now constituted.

Aleshire defeated Representative L. T. Marshall, of Xenia.

Several years ago, while cranking a truck, the engine of which was in gear, Aleshire was injured when the truck plunged into a ditch, pinning him against the bank and dislocated his back.

Although he is unable to walk, Aleshire drives his own automobile, working the controls through a series of hand levers.

Detroit, Nov. 4 (AP).—Frank Murphy, High Commissioner from the United States to the Philippines and Governor-elect of Michigan, will not return to the islands before assuming office, he announced today. A lack of time will prevent the trip, he said.

He said he would devote the time between now and January 1 winding up his insular affairs, but did not say whether he would ask to have his leave of absence, which expired today, extended or would reassume his duties temporarily.

St. Ignace, Mich., Nov. 4 (AP).—A quarantine sign on the home of Representative Prentiss M. Brown, Democratic United States Senator-elect, insures him freedom from visitors for the next three weeks.

The quarantine became effective a week ago Monday, when Brown's 14-year-old son became ill with scarlet fever. His wife and five of their seven children are at home. Two are away at school.

Having concluded his campaign, Brown voted yesterday and then voluntarily subjected himself to the quarantine by going home.

Boise, Idaho, Nov. 4 (AP).—Senator William E. Borah, at 71, keen-eyed veteran of six successful Senate campaigns, smilingly reflected upon the most spectacular of all tonight and said "now I want to rest."

"I anticipate the next six years will be tremendous years," he told friends who crowded 'round, congratulating him on his defeat of the hitherto unbeatable Democratic State leader, Gov. C. Ben Ross. Borah added soberly:

"Almost every question which can affect the welfare of our people will arise."

Late today, Borah, whose vote had been paralleling President Roosevelt's in the lead of all other candidates, bolted nearly 3,000 votes ahead of the President's total and stayed there.

Geneva, Nov. 4 (U.P.).—Carlo Beltramo, Italian proprietor of the League of Nations bar, famous for his invention of the "Haile Selassie" highball, today concocted a "Roosevelt cocktail" to celebrate the United States President's victory. It is composed of 48 "alcoholic states," as follows:

"Ten states of white Dutch curacao, ten of English gin, eight of grapefruit juice, 18 of French vermouth, one Angostura and one of absinthe. The absinthe should be 'gently dropped atop the cocktail.'"

Beltramo also adopted a slogan for the drink:

"Drink a Roosevelt cocktail and watch a landslide."

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE
Caused by Tired Kidneys
Many of those gnawing, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys—and may be relieved when treated in the right way.
The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.
If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, lumbago, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.
Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills. (Adv.)

YOUTH: Medora Roosevelt, whose name was front page when her mother recently barred her from entering any of the night clubs, visited the Cotton Club at 1 a. m. yesterday . . . ANGER: Mrs. Frances Dodge, of the Detroit Dodges, if you please, was another box-holder at the Cotton Club yesterday morning. Mrs. Dodge wouldn't permit them to sit with her for being so tardy—and gathered eight other friends instead . . . When the management asked her whether she'd O. The jury convicted the defendant, and on sentence day, the defense made the same plea—that a college man wouldn't try to steal a low-numbered car . . . "I'll take all that into consideration," the judge assured. "I'm sending him to the pen—but I'll see that he gets a low number."

How childish the studios act at times! For years Gary Cooper has been given first billing in advertising of his pictures. Jack Benny arrived on the "College Holiday" set followed by a secretary, a valet, and two gag men. They look like bodyguards, but what makes their parade particularly amusing is that all five of them smoke the same brand of cigars. Benny said, "Hello," and like an echo from the sidewalls, the other four repeated the greeting.

One of Benny's gag men is a chap named Billie Beloin. Until recently he was just a radio listener, and Jack's Sunday night show was his favorite program. One day he summoned courage to mail Benny a batch of funny stories and gag lines. The radio comedian at once telegraphed Beloin to come to Hollywood at his (Benny's) expense.

In this same picture is a character actress named Lucille Ward. She was called for extra work, but when it was discovered that the casting office had neglected to call an elderly woman for an important bit, the director selected Miss Ward because she looked able. She had to learn two pages of dialogue, which she did quickly with Horton's assistance. She enacted it letter-perfectly. At its end she smilingly said, "I have been an extra for years, just aching for such a chance as this. You see, for 15 years I was Marie Dressler's understudy on the stage!" Ah, the blindness of the motion-picture industry.

Washington 'Show Business' Goes on Holiday Jaunt At Press Club Soiree While Election Holds Stage

Variety Club, Mayflower Also Play Host to Entertainers; Paramount Scores Scoop With First Shoots of Roosevelt Thanking Hyde Park Neighbors

WHILE President Franklin Delano Roosevelt on Tuesday night was compiling the most staggering majority of popular and electoral votes ever garnered by any candidates in a national election, "show business" went holidaying in the usual spots.

BELL.

The National Press Club was a hotbed of friendly partisanship and housed the representatives of more than one theatrical venture due soon in Washington. Among them was Dick Maney, perhaps the most articulate of the Broadway stentors, who was present as a guest of the Fourth Estate but not unmindful that the main idea concerns not so much President Roosevelt as Noel Coward, who comes to the National on Monday night with Gertrude Lawrence in a series of nine one-act plays that are going to give the critical fraternity worse headaches than they already own before they are all run off on three "opening nights."

In another column of today's Post will be found a recital of the playlets in which Mr. Coward and Miss Lawrence will be seen during their fortnight at the National.

Down at the Variety Club, in the Willard, the theater really got going. Everybody who was anybody on the local stage or screen dropped in at one time or another.

Then there was the bill that Sidney Lust put on up at the Mayflower for the entertainment and benefit of the Sisterhood and Brotherhood of the Hebrew Congregation of Washington. Mr. Lust had among his stars Elaine Arden, the female George Givot, appearing this week with Johnny Perkins at the Capitol; Eddie White, the elongated raconteur and singing comedian from the Earle bill; Martin Yago, the Capital's juvenile Al Jolson—only more so—and an act or two from some of the supper clubs, including the Madrillon.

Personally, after having dabbled around all of these places, your favorite column wound up in the office of Carter Tate Barron, division manager of Loew's, Inc., in company with Mr. and Mrs. Gene Ford, Mr. and Mrs. Dave Sadell, Mrs. "Chic" Barron, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Bell—no relation—and divers and sundry others, sipping nicely chilled champagne in celebration of the election that went so overwhelmingly as everyone who had read the Gallup polls in this estimable family journal knew it would. What some of them hoped is something else again.

At any rate, it was an excessively gala evening, punctuated with much pungent repartee and no end of fluidity.

Aren't all election nights supposed to be like that?

Speaking of the Variety Club, it seems the parent organization, presided over by Chief Barker Johnny Harris in Pittsburgh, has decided to get out a house organ called The Barker, the Voice of Variety. The copy which arrived at my desk yesterday slightly before I did, carries a considerable amount of Washington news of Tent No. 11, the local branch, and a picture of Carter Barron, in charge of the annual soiree that is due to come off in the Willard the night of November 21, if I have my memory on straight.

Paramount News has gone and done it again. On the screens at the Earle and Metropolitan Theaters yesterday afternoon newsreel shots were flashed showing the re-elected President thanking his Hyde Park neighbors and the country at large for having reinstated him in office for another four years. The pictures were made at the Roosevelt ancestral home on the Hudson Tuesday night after the result of the balloting was assured and were on the screens of the Earle and Met early yesterday afternoon. Quick work I calls it.

It might be the part of wisdom to consult the "Film Time Tables", today, as well as the midweek notices appearing, I hope, elsewhere on this page or the next. Reviews in this spot tomorrow—the gods being propitious, which, at the moment, I somehow doubt.

Joyce Carey, it is interesting to note, is a member of the Noel Coward company coming to the National next Monday night. Miss Carey will be remembered by many who had the pleasure of meeting her at the time of its presentation here at the National as author of "Sweet Aloes," the play in which Evelyn Laye was starred, and which later was translated into celluloid drama, with Kay Francis in the stellar role.

Miss Carey is the daughter of the celebrated English actress, Lillian Braithwaite, who played a leading role in "The Vortex," Mr. Coward's first American success, presented some 11 years or so ago. It will be pleasant to welcome her back.

Yesterday afternoon and last night marked a ceremonial period for the ladies and gentlemen (sic) of the press. Beginning at 3 and continuing until rather well after the dinner hour, the Loew executives, headed by Carter Barron, gave a tea for Sara Churchill in the Carlton. Last night W. E. S. Wilcox, managing director of the Seco Theater in Silver Spring, Md., dined Master Edward de Selding Melcher in the rooms of the Variety Club in the Willard. Miss Churchill is said to be faced with imminent marriage to her dancing partner, Vic Oliver, with whom she will be seen on the Capitol screen tomorrow. Mr. Melcher is articled for a Hollywood writing assignment, beginning on the 15th.

Morning-After-the-Night-Before Note.

Well, anyway, it's lucky that election nights aren't of as frequent occurrence as Christmas, which comes along every year!

Having won the Gold statuette awarded by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for the superlative acting he contributed to "The Informer," Victor McLaglen now is said to have a comparably impressive vehicle in "The Magnificent Brute." This will be the next attraction at the RKO-Keith's Theater, opening on Friday upon the conclusion of Katharine Hepburn's local engagement in "A Woman Rebels."

Noel Coward to Co-Star in Own Plays With Gertrude Lawrence Next Week

Cycle of 9 One-Act Pieces Enjoyed Full Season's Success in London.

Tickets go on sale at the box-office of the National Theater today for the two-week engagement of Noel Coward and Gertrude Lawrence in "Tonight at Eight-Thirty," the general title for Mr. Coward's nine one-act plays opening next Monday night. This London success, which played all last season at the Phoenix Theater in the British capital, will be presented here in three bills, each comprised of three plays. Some of them are gay and brittle, some sombre, some in low comedy vien, some laden with nostalgia for the past, some cynical and sophisticated. The first bill, to be presented on Monday and Tuesday nights, will consist of "Heads Across the Sea," "The Astonished Heart" and "Red Peppers." On Wednesday and Thursday nights the bill will be made up of "We Were Dancing," "Fumed Oak" and "Shadow Play." Third of the triple programs will be "Ways and Means," "Still Life" and "Family Album." After the first week the successive programs will be repeated through a second week in the order named.

"The Charge of the Light Brigade," which the Warner Brothers will bring to the screen of the Earle Theater for the week beginning tomorrow, is a spectacular melodrama that probably never has had a peer in the tremendous sweep of its climax. Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland, Henry Stephenson, Patrick Knowles and a host of other players lend this romantic picturization of the heroic deeds that were done at Balaklava something of heart appeal, but it is the astounding charge of the famous 600 that speels greatness for this camera version of the Tennyson poem. Never has there been caught by the cameras so staggering a spectacle of courageous daring as is here depicted. On the stage, the bill will be headlined by Bill Powers' Dancing Beauties, the Ben Yost Singing Collegiates and other acts of the first rank.

Ann Corio will reappear as star of the bill at the Gayety Theater, beginning Sunday afternoon. Miss Corio, the foremost beauty of burlesque, will be the guest star of "Reds" Marshall's and Murray Leonard's "Burlesque Revue," one of the newest productions of the Independent Burlesque Association.

At Loew's Capitol Tomorrow

This would be Britain's dancing socialite, Sara Churchill, who is teamed with Vic Oliver as dancing partner, and will appear for the first time on a Washington stage as headliner of the bill announced for Loew's Capitol Theater tomorrow. Miss Churchill and Mr. Oliver were feted yesterday afternoon at the Carlton by Division Manager Carter Barron, of Loew's Inc., and his associate executives in the Washington office.

Powell and Loy Head All-Star Cast in Comedy

Harlow, Connolly, Tracy Have Roles in New Film Opening Here Today.

William Powell, Myrna Loy, Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy and Walter Connolly are the players who make of "Libeled Lady," opening today on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater, one of the most enlivening comedies of this or any other season. A lady starts a libel suit and a marriage is planned to forestall the payment of millions, or thereabouts—and there is where your fun starts. It is high comedy with a few recessions into low, but all on the side of wholesome fun. The bill, as goes without saying, will be handsomely augmented—although supplementaries are not needed with so engaging a feature—by short reel subjects and Metrotone News.

At the RKO-Keith Theater, beginning tomorrow, the chief feature of the bill for the new week will be "The Magnificent Brute," in which the title role is played by Victor McLaglen. It is reported from other cities in which this picture already has been shown, that it is one of the best of the season and affords its star another opportunity comparable to the brilliant outlet for his talents he found in "The Informer." The principal feminine role is played by Binnie Barnes, remembered as the Lillian Russell of Edward Arnold's "Diamond Jim." The bill will be completed by short-reel subjects and Pathe News.

"Ladies in Love" is the intriguing title of the film play to occupy the place of major importance on the screen bill at Loew's Capitol Theater, beginning tomorrow. The principal roles are played by Constance Bennett, Janet Gaynor, Loretta Young and that provocative young French person, known to the trade as Simone Simon, which instead of being See-moan Sigh-man is reputed to be See-Moan See-moan. On the stage the chief attraction will be the widely publicized Sara Churchill, who with her fiance-partner, Vic Oliver, will headline the bill in a dancing act.

"Les Miserables," the French version of the Victor Hugo classic, will continue through two performances at the Belasco today, when the house will be closed, preparatory to reopening at 7:30 for the first Washington presentations of "Carnival in Flanders," otherwise known as "La Kermesse Heroique." This is an item that has inspired a considerable degree of controversy and is said to be one of the finest of the European productions to reach this side.

Beginning today at the Rialto Theater, the foremost feature of the bill will be a revival of "Hell's Angels," the wartime aviation picture in which Jean Harlow first came to prominence. Ben Lyons and James Hall are cast in the roles of primary male importance. The picture was produced by Howard Hughes and represents one of the largest money investments in the history of the celluloids.

Charles Ruggles and Mary Boland are the pictured stars of "Wives Never Know," major feature of the screen bill at the Warner Brothers' Metropolitan Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. This is another of their absurdly comic vehicles in which they have never been surpassed by any domestic costellar team since the days of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. The bill will be augmented by the customary short screen subjects and full, 15-minute newsreel.

For Armistice Week at the Little Theater the screen attraction will be a revival of "All Quiet on the Western Front," a story of the Great War in which the principal roles are played by Lew Ayers, Ben Alexander and a score or more of others whose contributions to the gory spectacle of wholesale slaughter made film history a few years ago.

"The Devil Is a Sissy," having scored an eminently successful F street first week, now moves down to Loew's Columbia Theater where it will be the major feature of the screen bill for the week beginning tomorrow. In this subject, the roles of prime importance are played by Freddie Bartholomew, Jackie Cooper and Mickey Rooney.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

"Without exception the world's greatest player and teacher," Ely Culbertson says.

Elementary Technique.

There are times when the declarer should pay no attention to the fact that there is one outstanding high trump in a defender's possession; it may well be that the declarer can go merrily about his business of running off side suit cards with the statement that the high trump can make whenever the holder chooses. At other times, however, it is vital to force a defender to take his high trump—not when he wants to, but when the declarer wants him to. The distinction is worth study.

West, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ 10 5 ♡ 9 8 3 ◇ A K Q 10 4 ♣ J 4 3
♠ 7 6 ♡ K Q J 3 ◇ 7 6 5 3 2 ♣ 10 9	West North East South	♠ J 9 8 4 ♡ 10 7 6 ◇ 9 ♣ K Q 6 5 2
	♠ A K Q 3 2 ♡ A 5 4 ◇ J 8 ♣ A 8 7

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

West opened the heart King, and declarer won with the Ace. He then took three rounds of trumps, and when they failed to break, made a wild rush for discards on dummy's diamond suit. He expected to discard one heart on the third round, and one on the fourth, even though East should trump this latter with his high trump. If that plan were to succeed, he would lose only two clubs and the high trump. He reckoned very badly, however.

East, however, had a different theory about the matter; he could have ruffed the second lead of the suit, but this would have been a bad play. He waited until he could be sure that the declarer's diamond communication cards were exhausted, and ruffed the third round. This cost the defenders a trick, but an unimportant one, and was worthwhile as insurance.

Declarer got rid of only one heart and still had to lose the two clubs, in addition to the high trump and the heart that he had left.

The hand was an elementary one, and there was no excuse for him, or any other player past the novice stage, to go wrong. After seeing that the trumps did not break, declarer should have led a fourth round to insure that the high trump, which might easily interfere with the running off of the diamond suit, was taken at a stage convenient to himself. The enemy could have cashed two hearts in addition to the high spade, but could not have taken any other trick.

Mr. Farley Smith Weds Miss Laura Douglas In Ceremony at Epiphany Episcopal Church

Members of 2 Families Are Only Attendants at Service.

Reception Held at Home of Bride's Mother on Mass. Ave.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

A wedding, plans for which had been shrouded in secrecy, took place at high noon yesterday when Miss Laura Douglas, daughter of Mrs. Oscar F. Douglas, became the bride of Mr. Charles Saxon Farley Smith, son of Senator and Mrs. Ellison Durant Smith, of Lynchburg, S. C. Although only members of the immediate families were present, the ceremony at the Church of the Epiphany was such as might have taken place with a large gathering of friends in attendance.

The rector, the Rev. Dr. ZeBarney Phillips, read the marriage service. The altar was decorated with Easter lilies and the chancel with palms. The bride wore a gown of white satin, made on simple lines, with a fold of the material high at the back of the neck like a small collar, the sleeves puffed at the shoulders, close-fitting below the elbow and coming to points over the hands. The skirt fell in a long train and her veil of illusion, which was of equal length, was held over her soft hair with a braided satin band. She carried Easter lilies.

Mrs. Carlton Pierce 3d, of Florence, S. C., sister of the bridegroom, whose friends know him as Farley, rather than as Charles, was matron of honor. Her gown was of powder-blue taffeta, with which she wore a silver lame turban and carried a bouquet of pink roses. Mr. Ellison Durant Smith, jr., brother of the bridegroom, served as best man.

The bride, a petite, demure young person with light brown hair and blue eyes, seemed nervous during the ceremony, but appeared composed when the service was over.

Her mother, who gave her in marriage, wore a gown of king's blue velvet with large, flowing sleeves and a hat to match, and Mrs. Smith wore black velvet with a black hat. Both had corsages of gardenias.

Also present were the bride's young brother, Mr. Oscar Douglas, jr., the bridegroom's father, Senator Smith; Mr. Thomas Bradley, with whom the bridegroom has been staying since his return to Washington this fall; Mrs. ZeBarney Phillips and the bridegroom's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Alfred Lawton, at whose wedding Dr. Phillips officiated in 1934. Mrs. Lawton yesterday wore a frock of black taffeta with cerise flowers at the neck, and a black hat.

A reception and wedding breakfast at the residence of the bride's mother, 1785 Massachusetts avenue, followed the ceremony. High bouquets of Easter lilies decorated the drawing room. In the dining room were set a buffet table and three smaller tables at which the guests were seated. There roses of a delicate shade of pink were used for the table centerpiece and all of the glasses were of crystal of the same shade.

Party Is Given For Bride-to-Be

Miss Frances Mathews, of West Chester, Pa., whose marriage to Mr. Thomas McAvoy, of this city, will take place Saturday, was guest of honor at a small tea given by Mrs. Theodore W. Cook at her home, 3114 Nineteenth street, yesterday afternoon.

The guests included Mrs. Henry Mathews, mother of the bride-to-be; Miss Margaret Baldwin, one of the bridesmaids; Miss Helen Taylor, Mrs. Benjamin F. Taylor, Mrs. A. Z. Woods, Miss Amelia MacFadyen, Mrs. C. Ridgeway Taylor, Mrs. Griffith Clark and Miss Claire Taylor. The other bridesmaid, Miss Jane Cendit, is coming from out of town for the wedding and will not arrive until tomorrow evening.

The shower gifts were in a large box decorated with yellow crepe paper, which was drawn into the living room by 5-year-old Miss Cynthia Cook, daughter of the hostess, who wore an old-fashioned costume and poke-bonnet of pink flowered material trimmed with yellow ruffles.

Kondrups Mark Their 50th Year Of Married Life

Mrs. Peckham and Husband Hosts at Reception for Her Parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Peckham last night entertained at a reception attended by several hundred guests in honor of the golden wedding anniversary of Mrs. Peckham's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Kondrup, of Georgetown. Both the bride and bridegroom of 50 years ago were born in Washington and Mr. Kondrup's father was the first Danish Consul to the United States, representing his country here before a legation was established.

Mrs. Kondrup last night wore a princess gown of white satin with a long train and her corsage was of orchids. Receiving with her and Mr. Kondrup were Mr. and Mrs. Peckham, the latter wearing a copper-colored crepe gown; another daughter, Mrs. J. Winter Graves, in gold lace; Mr. Kondrup's sister, Mrs. W. M. Stilwell, of New Rochelle, N. Y., who wore black lace; his sister-in-law, Mrs. E. H. Kondrup, who wore black velvet trimmed in ermine, and Mrs. Carl Sparrwardt, of Philadelphia, whose gown was blue lace over silver.

The house was decorated with chrysanthemums through all the rooms. The bride's cake formed the centerpiece for the table in the dining room and was cut by Mrs. Kondrup at 10 o'clock.

Assisting at the reception were Mrs. Henry Van Arsdale, Mrs. Philip Terrell, Miss Jean McGarraghy, Mrs. John J. Edwards and Miss Margheritta Stirling, a grand niece of Mr. and Mrs. Kondrup.

Mrs. C. F. Berger, of Baltimore, and Mrs. Harold Neeley, of Philadelphia, were among the guests from out of town.

Mrs. Harper Sibley To Address League

Mrs. William W. Mackall, jr., president of the Washington Junior League, will introduce Mrs. Harper Sibley when she speaks today at the league's luncheon at the Mayflower Hotel.

With this opening event, the league program for the season will be officially under way.

The Ambassador of Chile, Senor Don Manuel Trucco, will leave Sunday with his daughter, Senorita Marta Trucco, for New York, where they will attend the National horse show at Madison Square Garden.

The Ambassador's other two daughters, Senorita Rebecca Trucco and Senorita Graciela Trucco, left yesterday to attend the event, and they will stay with the former President of Nicaragua and Senora de Sacasa. They will all return to the Capital on Tuesday.

Dr. Ramiro Guerra, who has been doing so much interesting research work at the Libary of Congress and in the files of the State Department, is leaving too soon for Havana. During the time that he has been here, he has become quite a welcome member of the sets in town and his son and daughter, Hector and Mercedes, have been indeed popular in the younger circles. Last evening, Dr. Oscar Albertini and Senora de Albertini were hosts at dinner at the Shoreham in honor of the departees.

Geraldine Ainsa, who has been here visiting her brother-in-law and sister, the John B. Coulters, in their home on Connecticut avenue, is planning to leave shortly to spend some time with her uncle and aunt, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Luke McNamee. Making a round of visiting, she will also pay a call on her brother-in-law and sister, Baron and Baroness Istvan Kroanyi—she was Pat Ainsa before her marriage last year—in New York. Then, when the snow and Christmas cards have been cleared away, Geraldine will return to the Capital for another too brief stay before going on South to her home in El Paso.

Don Galloway and his bride, the former Freddie Geoffries, are returning to Washington today after a wedding trip here and there and practically everywhere. Their last stopping place was West Point, where they had much fun running into old friends both had known before.

Speaking of West Point reminds us that winsome Alice Torrey Griffith is among the lucky ones to be going to see the Army-Notre Dame game on November 14. She and Dave Erskine will be the week-end guests of the Jacob Devers at the academy and with their hosts will have the added thrill of viewing the battle between the future generals and the Irish from a box!

Angelica Lloyd is due back from New York after spending several days there shopping and getting prepared for the winter styles. Also returning from Gotham is Mary Senate Howes, who, with her parents, the Acting Postmaster General and Mrs. W. W. Howes, were there for the election excitement. Mary Senate had one hectic time trying to decide just what she wanted to do last week. There was the velvet ball in New York, then the next night the tacky ball was taking place here, then again New York had the spotlight with the election. M. S. would have had to be a commuter in order to get back and forth in time for each soiree. So she let the velvet ball go and attended the other festivities.

Judge Goodwin And Wife Return From Campaign

Judge and Mrs. Clarence Horton Goodwin who went to Illinois several weeks ago to remain "until after President Roosevelt's election," have returned enthusiastic over the overwhelming majority given the President there.

Judge Goodwin campaigned in Lake County, where their estate, Apple Green, is located near Lake Forest, and also spoke at Democratic gatherings held in Chicago.

Senator J. Hamilton Lewis was the dynamic figure at all of the meetings, according to the Goodwins, and Mrs. Lewis was always on the platform with him. Mrs. Goodwin and Mrs. Lewis were both on the stage last Friday night when Ruth Bryan Owen made her dramatic appearance as one of the speakers at Paradise Dance Hall on the West Side, in Chicago, where a crowd of 10,000 had waited for four hours before the rally opened. Although she could scarcely walk, she stood without her cane and was greeted with an ovation before she spoke.

Piedmont Hunt, Oldest in U. S., Is Staged Near Upperville, Va.

Grafton Hall, Home of Dr. and Mrs. A. C. Randolph, Presents Colorful Scene for Historical Event, Organized in 1840; More Than 50 Are Guests.

By Grace Brooks.

Grafton Hall, lovely home near Upperville, Va., of Dr. and Mrs. A. C. Randolph, former M. F. H. of the Piedmont Hunt, oldest recognized hunt in America, presented a colorful scene yesterday morning as hounds gathered on the wide lawn for the opening meet of this event, which was organized in 1840. Scarlet-coated men and women in chic riding habits mounted on thoroughbreds, followed the eager hounds as they left Grafton Hall at 10:30 and drew around within a radius of 1 mile.

After a splendid ride and a chase of 30 minutes in pursuit of a speedy red, the field returned to Grafton and the riders were entertained at a hunt breakfast by Dr. and Mrs. Randolph. Gathered in the lovely drawing rooms of the colonial estate or on the porches—for the weather was spring-like—the 50 or more guests enjoyed the hospitality of the host while they discussed the morning's chase.

Among those who rode were Mrs. Amory Carhart, wife of the M. F. H. of the Warrenton Hunt; Mrs. Baldwin Spillman, jr., of Warrenton; Mrs. William Mitchell, of Detroit, who is a guest of Mrs. C. Oliver Islin; Mr. and Mrs. Iselin, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Frost, Col. and Mrs. John Butler, Capt and Mrs. Samuel Marshall, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Guest, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Young, Mr. and Mrs. George Robert Slater and their gest, Miss Margaret Green, of Richmond; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur White, who have just returned from New York; Mrs. White's daughter, Miss Bettina Belmont; Mrs. Herman Boker, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Llewellyn, Mr. and Mrs. Turner Wiltshire, Mr. Frederick H. Prince, jr., Dr. Cary Langhorne, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Fletcher, Mr. Taylor Hardin.

Also Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Langley, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Skinner, Mr. and Mrs Hubert Phipps, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Hulbert, Mr. and Mrs. Barry Hall, Mr. and Mrs Charles Cushman, Mr. and Mrs. George Garrett, Mr. Tom Slater, of Washington; Mr. Harrison, of The Plains; Mr. Richard S. Peach, Miss Peggy Spavin, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Frost, Mr. Truman Welling, of Kentucky; Mr. Archie Cary Randolp, jr., who recently returned after a trip around the world, and Dr. Randolph, who led the field.

Among those who gathered at Grafton to see the hounds start were Mr. and Mrs. George Gaither, Dr. and Mrs. Fred Gochnauer.

Politics Over, Capital Society Turns to Music

Responsive Audience Greets Kindler's Appearance With Symphony.

By Dudley Harmon.

The night after election was saved from being something of an anti-climax by the National Symphony's first concert of the season, which took place last evening before a brilliant audience in Constitution Hall. Dr. Kindler, who is a great favorite at dinner parties as well as on the concert stage, conducted and many of the most ardent supporters of his work were there to applaud him.

Gowns worn by members of society present last evening reached a new high for elegance so far this short but hectic season. Such a display of ermine wraps, orchid corsages, glittering lame, and even top hats!

Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, who seldom misses a concert, was present wearing a gown of Havana brown crepe with a lei of velvet flowers in a matching shade. With her in her box were the Counselor of the Polish Embassy and Mme. Wankowicz, the latter in a floor-length black gown with long sleeves.

The Brazilian Embassy took a box last night in honor of the soloist, Guiomar Novaes, which was occupied by several members of the Embassy.

Mme. Saito, wife of the Japanese Ambassador, sat nearby, wearing a simply-made evening gown of pastel blue chiffon. Mrs. Walter Tuckerman and Mrs. C. Roland were others who had taken boxes. Mrs. Roland's party included her daughter, Miss Diane Roland, Mr. Otakar Kabelac, First Secretary of the Czechoslovakian Legation, and Miss Florence Harriss.

A boxholder, and one of the most ardent workers for the symphony, Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, came all the way from Newport for the concert. Canada was represented by the newly arrived Minister and Lady Marler.

Miss Mabel Boardman, who always arrives well ahead of time for concerts, had as her guest the Financial Counselor of the British Embassy and Mrs. T. K. Bewley, the latter wearing a fur-trimmed brocade wrap over her gown.

The rainy evening kept a number of people away. There were still members of society, however, who met and chatted together during intermission. Among them were Mrs. Burke Elbrick, Mr. and Mrs. William Chapin Huntington, the Attache of the Swiss Legation and Mme. Schlatter—Mme. Schlatter wore a black military wrap over her evening gown—Miss Mary Cootes in a Chinese gown of blue brocade, and Miss Alice Graeme with Mr. Theodore Dominick.

The Ambassador of Italy and Signora Suvich are in New York, where they will remain until Monday.

Mexican Diplomats To Sail Saturday

The Ambassador of Mexico, Senor Dr. Don Francisco Castillo Najera, and the first secretary of the embassy, Senor Dr. Don Rafael Fuentes, who will sail Saturday aboard the S. S. American Legion for the Peace conference in Buenos Aires, will leave Washington this morning for New York.

They will be accompanied by Senora de Castillo Najera, Senorita Erma Castillo Najera, Senorita Lupe Davila, niece of the ambassador, and Senora de Castillo Najera and the second secretary, Senor Dr. Don Manuel Gonzalezy Gonzalez, who will bid them bon voyage and return to the Capital on Sunday.

Wilma E. Dahn Becomes Bride Of Mr. Linkins

Families, Intimate Friends Witness Ceremony in Chevy Chase.

Members of the two families and intimate friends witnessed the wedding at 10:30 o'clock yesterday morning of Miss Wilma Estelle Dahn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Dahn, of Chevy Chase, to Mr. Bernard Riley Linkins, son of Mr. and Mrs. William George Linkins, of Silver Spring, Md. The wedding took place at the home of the bride's parents, which was decorated for the occasion with autumn flowers, yellow and brown chrysanthemums predominating. The Rev. Ralph Smith officiated.

The bride wore a brown matelasse street dress, with brown and gold accessories, and an antique gold watch and chain worn by her grandmother at her wedding. She also wore her grandmother's wedding band. Her corsage was of Belmont gardenias and lilies of the valley and she was given in marriage by her father.

The bride's sister, Miss Eloise N. Dahn, was her maid of honor and only attendant, wearing a frock of green and brown with brown accessories and a corsage of gardenias. Mr. William Eugene Hauver, jr., of Harrington, Del. was best man.

A wedding breakfast at the Columbia Country Club followed the ceremony.

After a wedding trip to Pinehurst, N. C., Mr. and Mrs. Linkins will reside in Chevy Chase.

Simses Are Hosts At Cocktail Party

Members of the British Embassy were among the hundred-odd guests who gathered yesterday afternoon to meet Admiral and Mrs. Sidney Bailey at a cocktail party given by the Attache of the Embassy and Mrs. Harold Sims in their apartment at Wardman Park Hotel. Mrs. Sims wore a gown of royal blue.

Mrs. Bailey is the former Mildred Bromwell, of Washington. She and her husband are spending the week here. Mrs. Joseph Leiter will entertain in their honor at dinner this evening.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

16-Year-Old Girl, Rather a Bookworm, Is Infatuated With Classmate and Asks How to Attract Him.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 16 and infatuated with a boy about 17 who is in two of my classes and with whom I talk about classwork only—very seldom about anything else. He goes around with another crowd; has a girl and doesn't seem particularly interested in me, except as someone to compare answers with.

• • • •

I am not a particularly entertaining person to be with, apparently. I am comparatively shy and my boy friends are few and far between. And when I do have one he doesn't last very long. I suppose my greatest handicap is that I can't have evening dates (my parents' idea) except on special occasions. I don't dance very well, but then he doesn't know that. I am not witty and quite often say the wrong thing at the wrong time.

• • • •

To get back to this boy: He is in the Cadets and I am in the Girls' Auxiliary, which is a club that entertains the Cadets. This fact may help a little—I don't know. As far as my assets go, I am fairly good looking and dress quite well. And naturally, since I don't have anything else to do, I study quite hard and make pretty good marks, although I guess this is not much of an asset.

• • • •

Well, now, what I want to know is how can I possibly get this one boy interested in me sufficiently to ask me to dances, plays and games at school? I wish to know how, and shall do my best to win him. Please help me. Sincerely yours. SCHOOL GIRL.

How to Attract.

DEAR SCHOOL GIRL: The thing to do, of course, is to make the boy aware of you as a personality, instead of as a bookworm with whom to compare answers. Make him see that you are a very pretty girl, by having a fresh, glowing complexion; beautifully clean, soft, becomingly arranged hair, and becoming clothes that are immaculately dainty and well pressed. See to it that you are always supplied with feminine looking handkerchiefs, for instance, snowy white, perhaps delicately scented—since it would hardly do for you, a school girl, to wear perfume on your person or apparel to the school room. Have your hands scrupulously kept, your nails exquisitely manicured. Keep your stocking seams in place, and your shoe heels built up to perfection.

• • • •

See if it is not possible to give the conversation a personal turn occasionally, through inviting some comment about himself. It will do no harm to let him see that you are really interested in him, and admiringly so. If you have heard any compliments on his prowess in any field, social or sports or scholastic, tell him so. Insted of always supplying him with the right answers to questions, or waiting for him to take the lead in putting questions, you might appeal to him as an authority once in a while; ask his help in solving a problem or drafting an answer, and thank him warmly and gratefully for whatever help is given. It is impossible for any man not to feel a glow of approval or an interest in a person, particularly a girl, whom he has been able to help.

• • • •

You might express admiration for certain popular girls, or even praise the girl he goes with, and ask him confidentially why he supposes it is that you find it so difficult to make social conversation as a rule. You might tell him you enjoy talking with him more than with any boy you have met in school, and say that he seems to have more intelligence and understanding than other boys. He will probably lap up such praise and hunger for more. You might tell him he has no idea what a help it is to have him to compare notes with, and that you wish he were in all your classes.

• • • •

Of course, it is entirely possible that you may say and do all these things and yet fail of your purpose; but you can't accomplish anything if you don't try; and improving your social technique in an effort to win this boy's personal friendship, you may gain indirect benefits by attracting the attention of some other boy or boys.

• • • •

One last bit of advice: Don't neglect your studies for boys. You may be the type of girl who is destined to know her greatest social success in the years which follow after school days; and in a company where a cultivated intellect will be your greatest asset. Girls who are shy and gauche with their schoolmates often develop into women with the rare, indefinable charms of high breeding. They are the type who ripen slowly, and who necessarily feel themselves at a disadvantage during their high school days when associating with persons of the early ripe variety, who often pay for their early success by never developing beyond a relatively limited point. M. H.

Are They Married?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Six years ago I married a man who was already married to another woman. A year later he obtained a divorce. Can you tell me if our marriage is legal or not? This all happened in the State of Washington. WORRIED.

• • • •

DEAR WORRIED: Miss Beatrice Clephane, director of Washington's Legal Aid Bureau, as well as a lawyer in private practice here, both of whom I consulted in regard to your inquiry, concur in the opinion that you are not legally married to the man you regard as your husband. Both suggested that you get legal counsel in the matter, and make immediate arangements to go through a second ceremony, under circumstances least likely to bring embarrassment or publicity upon yourselves. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

TH7 WIFE of our family doctor dropped by the other morning to return some knitting needles she'd borrowed. And to talk about some redecorating she's been planning.

"I was so thrilled with our new house," she said, "then I found that the wall spaces were so cut up by doors and windows that I couldn't fit things in decently. I've jiggled the furniture around till I'm dizzy. But at last I've worked out a plan that isn't bad at all, providing it's all right to put two big upholstered chairs in the dining room. They were in the living room at the old place, but we haven't room for them there now. Then I'd like to make a few changes in my dining room besides. I'll have to keep the walls as they are—a soft light green, and the rug is more of a blue-green. What would you advise for chair seats, curtains and new coverings for the upholstered chairs?"

"What about flame-colored draperies for the windows?" we offered. "They would balance the cool colors you have in the walls and in the rug. And you could have two easy chairs in a figured material on a cafe au lait ground. For the dining chair seats, plain colored coverings in cafe au lait color would be the best thing. And oh yes, about the easy chairs in the dining room—that's one of our own particular pet ideas . . . lounging chairs in the dining room. They're nice arranged with a coffee table between and placed in a grouping under a window. Or if there's a fireplace, they're doubly pleasant pulled up to it."

Working Knowledge of Good Taste in Dress As Essential to School Girl as Education

How to Make Wise Choice Matter of College Research.

By Malvina Lindsay.

THERE was first the high school and college era in which docile feminine grinds wore the plain—and often ugly—garments practical mothers bought for them. Then there was the era in which sophisticated young things strolled to classes in afternoon tea and ballroom ensembles. Now, out of these two extremes, has been born the era when the question of "What shall I wear?" has become a matter of scholastic research.

The recent publication by Frieda Wiegand McFarland, professor of textiles and clothes of the College of Home Economics of the University of Maryland, of a small volume "Good Taste in Dress" designed for the guidance of high school and college girls reveals the revolution that has taken place in educational institutions toward the dress problem. It shows that knowledge of the right shade of rouge to wear is now as essential to the college girl as the answer to "How much is X plus Y?"

Errors of Overdress

Attractive dress is a matter of intelligence, maintains Mrs. McFarland. Dress and personality, she holds, are as vital factors in getting and holding jobs as are degrees and technical knowledge. The day has passed when the grind or even the near-genius can get by on brains alone whether it be on a college campus or in the business and professional world.

It was this realization that caused Mrs. McFarland to compile a simple guide for clothes and make-up for girls. She believes there are certain principles of dress that transcend the vagaries of fashion and that the girl who knows them will never be a dowd.

All girls are eager to look their best and express their personality through clothes, Mrs. McFarland believes. Many of them err along the lines of overdress and ornamentation because they have the wrong standards. This situation has caused much of the criticism of the overdressed high school girl. But now with the art of dress and make-up being taught so widely, schoolgirls are dressing with better taste and more simplicity.

Advice on Make-Up.

Not only general principles of dress but plenty of specific hints are contained in Mrs. McFarland's clothes guide. Far from decrying schoolgirl make-up she tells how it should be done artistically.

"In selecting rouge," she advises, "match the color of the unrouged lips. Then blend the tone of the powder, lipstick and eyebrow pencil to this rouge tone and to the skin."

For accessories she has these suggestions:

"Good taste demands that accessories agree in texture with the dress. Pearls, for instance, are associated with rich textures. Therefore, they cannot be worn successfully with a sweater. Accessories must be in scale with the figure. Large wooden ornaments are becoming to a tall person but not to a petite one. Rings and necklaces must be fitting to the age of the wearer. Precious stones and rich designs belong to the other woman. Simple designs are in keeping with youth."

Finding one's right color is important for the schoolgirl to learn early, Mrs. McFarland points out, and she gives many suggestions for doing this.

"The coloring of the vast majority of girls is warm or cool," she says. Where the skin shows violet red, especially in the lips, the coloring is considered cool. According to the law of harmony this type finds cool blues, greens, blue-greens and blue-violets most becoming.

"When orange red dominates the skin tone, the scheme is warm. Girls with this combination look best in warm colors—oranges, red and yellows."

A girl frequently can determine her own type and dress to it, Mrs. McFarland believes, by studying movie stars. Among the movie types from which many girls seek their clothes inspiration she cites the athletic type, typified by Ginger Rogers and Dorothy Lee; the boyish type represented by Katharine Hepburn; the sophisticated type by Kay Francis; the ingenue, by Janet Gaynor and the romantic type by Marlene Dietrich and Norma Shearer.

"If you find you are a mixture of types," she says, "you are a typical American girl.

"No matter what type you are," she advises, "or what style you may choose to develop, do it well with never a spark of cheap imitation. If your style is to be a princess, let the world make no mistake about it. Be sure that you are not taken as one of her attendants."

Ten Laws of Economy.

Mrs. McFarland gives these ten laws of clothes economy for girls:

1. Invest in fabrics of good quality. Cheap materials look old and worn much sooner than better ones.
2. Avoid cheap-looking accessories. A few, properly chosen, may be used again and again with a variety of dresses.
3. Don't strive for a large wardrobe. Correctly harmonized, not numerous changes are important.
4. Don't be a slave to fashion. A good model marked yesterday is smarter than a poor one labeled today.
5. Avoid fripperies and shun noisy clothes.
6. Buy with reference to upkeep; frequent dry cleaning is an item of expense and hard on materials.
7. Learn to respect fabrics and trimmings that have served you well by adapting them to a new fashion.
8. Plan every little part of your costume with regard to your type and individuality. You usually enjoy wearing such a dress a long time.
9. Mend weak spots immediately.
10. Select simple designs of good line. This style of dress will serve more than one purpose.

Harris & Ewing.

High school and college girls should be helped in their pursuit of beauty and style as well as of learning, believes Mrs. Frieda Wiegand McFarland, who is providing such a service at the University of Maryland.

Paris Sponsors Knits for Afternoon

The unique knitted frock at left is by Schiaparelli. Contrasting vest-effect ties at throat forming a scarf; hat of same knitted material. White leaves on navy ground distinguish blouse of the youthful knit costume below with navy skirt.

By Ethel Ehlen.

The Post Fashion Editor.

HAVING created a sensation by the knitted evening gowns, Paris is now doing startling and dramatic things with daytime costumes. Not only are the patterns unusual, but the styling is decidedly outstanding. Knits are treated as fabrics in clever and distinctive manipulations. Solid colors and designs are combined to form both sophisticated and youthful effects.

Parisians are wearing knitted frocks and suit-like costumes under dressy afternoon coats to informal daytime functions. Americans are donning sleek, knitted frocks under fur and fur-trimmed coats for tea and cocktails. If your wardrobe doesn't boast of several knitted costumes this winter, it is definitely not well-balanced.

Much of the popularity of this "needle and yarn material" is due to the new yarns. They are so light in weight, adapting themselves to current trends and styles, they do not add bulk to the figure as the old-styled knitted costumes were apt to do. Block-knit patterns also make it possible to gage the shape of the garment more accurately, supplementing directions for adding stitches.

The majority of the Paris knits appear in dark tones and dark accented with bright color, in the patterened part of the costume. American designers, preferring subdued tones of brilliant colors, deep pastels and dramatic combinations of unusual tints. The Parisian idea of wearing dressy afternoon hats with knitted frocks, has invaded this side of the Atlantic. Americans even having the courage to add a veil to the chic style picture.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

New York, Nov. 4.

ONE of the most potent merchandising factors in the life of our seldom really fair city is what is called "snob appeal." That is the power exerted by shops which peddle costly and "exclusive" raiment, by those restaurants whose head waiters inspect you closely and haughtily remark that they haven't a table for your ilk, and by those little gatherings of choice spirits which throw parties for themselves whose principal idea is to keep the muckers out.

ALICE HUGHES.

Our theater world and those fringe-socialites who affect it have a little group of their own called "The Sixty Club" which gathers for exhibition and gossip purposes on Saturday nights at the Pierre, on Fifth avenue. A member may bring guests at $10 a head, and then it is every girl for herself.

Jolly and self-conscious little shindigs, these—with lynx-eyed beauties smiling with their greasy, red lips, but coldly appraising their sisters with their orbs. You'll see everybody there who IS anybody in that strange, nervous and high-pitched world.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Bronchitis and Breathlessness.

Because we have difficulty in breathing or become short-winded after exertion we must not jump to the conclusion that we have heart disease. There is a fairly common condition called emphysema in which the patient develops what is called a barrel-shaped chest. At the same time portions of the lungs are unable to function. The victim has difficulty in securing enough air because some of the alveoli (air sacs) are so stretched that they cannot contract and expand and thus transfer oxygen to the blood. These structures may resemble somewhat an old rubber band that has lost its elasticity.

What has brought about such a marked interruption of respiration? The situation arises chiefly because of a long-standing bronchitis in which the secreted mucus stops up some of the tubes which carry air to the lungs. When the chest expands during inspiration considerable air will be forced past these obstructions into the air sacs. But all of it cannot be pushed out again with expiration. In other words, the ability to suck air into the lungs is greater than to expel it. If this process continues for a few months the air cells become stretched and distended beyond their power to resume their normal shape. Some of them may even rupture.

But, you say, bronchitis certainly will not cause enough trouble to interfere with air reaching the lungs. We may mistakenly assume that all the mucus is coughed up and that the tubes are thus cleared. It is true that they are emptied somewhat but not wholly. The exudate is exceedingly sticky and will block completely some of the smaller bronchi, thus preventing air from entering or leaving these areas. As a result, a certain amount of air may be trapped in numerous small spaces in the lungs.

Mothers Urged To Train Baby For Any Foods

Initiation Should Start as Soon as Liquid Eating Lets Up.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

AS SOON as a baby has begun to eat solid food every effort should be made to increase the variety of his diet. Every day or two some new vegetable, fruit juices or cereal should be introduced into his meals. At first only a little bit should be offered to him, to accustom him to the new flavor. It should be given to him between mouthfuls of some food which he already likes, and no comment on the novelty should be made.

For some reason the person who insists upon a limited diet is very apt to be narrow-minded and provincial. The man or woman who likes many winds of food and is always ready to try something new is frequently tolerant and cosmopolitan.

Whether tolerance is the result of a good digestion or the good digestion is produced by tolerance is not easy to say. The fact remains that the good qualities are often found in combination.

It stands to reason that the person who wants to see the world must be able to eat many strange things. If his tastes are narrow he had probably best stay at home. The future seems to hold endless possibilities of travel for the children now growing up, and parents should prepare these youngsters as far as possible with this in mind.

The most trying person in the world is the man or woman who likes nothing that is new or exotic; who must have his regular breakfast of eggs and cereal, his daily slice of roast and order of potatoes and green vegetables. He may have an excellent digestion, but by carrying his prejudices with him wherever he goes he makes life wretched for those about him.

On the Air Today

"America's Town Meeting of the Air" begins a new season tonight with three speakers discussing their individual views on "Public Opinion and the Town Meeting Idea." The new series will be heard Thursday nights from WMAL, at 9:30.

For tonight: Dorothy Thompson, journalist; Lawrence Dennis, former member of the United States diplomatic service and writer on political economy, and Scott Nearing, sociologist and economist. George V. Denny, moderator, will introduce them.

In the near future "America's Town Meeting" will present equally informed speakers in discussions of such subjects as "Do We Need Uniform Divorce and Marriage Laws?" and "What Price Must We Pay for Peace?" As last season, there will be no debates among the speakers but rather an open forum of opinion after the formal talks. Questions from the auditorium audience will be answered.

The program last year won the Women's National Radio Committee award for the best education feature of the air. A special feature of tonight's first program will be the attendance of broadcasting officials from many European countries now in New York to participate in the celebration of N. B. C.'s tenth anniversary.

Press Comment on Election

EMPORIA GAZETTE.

(By William Allen White, a personal friend of Gov. Landon).

It was not a Roosevelt victory and not a Landon defeat, but it was a revelation of a changed attitude toward government.

The current of the new attitude now is rushing on with more fury than direction—perhaps.

What then is this new attitude which has given color and direction to the last two Presidential elections? It is a firm desire on the part of the American people to use government as an agency for human welfare. The general welfare clause of the preamble to the American Constitution will point the way for a new course in American life.

LOS ANGELES TIMES.

(Republican, supported Landon).

President Roosevelt was re-elected yesterday by electoral and popular majorities which may set new records * * * but when these majorities are subtracted the votes directly traceable to factors other than the merits of the campaign issues, the result has somewhat less of the aspect of an overwhelming popular indorsement of Administration policies. * * *

As for the President himself, there seems more reason to believe that he will veer to the right than otherwise. He will not be a candidate in 1940 and it will no longer be necessary for him to favor special groups for political support.

BALTIMORE SUN.

Independent Democratic; refused support to either President Roosevelt or Gov. Landon.)

One of the greatest triumphs ever achieved by a President seeking re-election. * * * But it does not follow that Mr. Roosevelt should be given blind support in the future or that critical opposition should be relaxed. It is possible to recognize fully his remarkable victory and to pay tribute to his success, and yet to insist * * * upon the great need for the restoration in this country of an active, critical, political intelligence. * * *

* * * Mr. Roosevelt so conducted his fight that he is free to move in virtually any direction * * * and it will not be possible easily to confound him with broken pledges, as after 1932.

NEW YORK SUN.

(Republican.)

No amount of money could have been the single factor in the sweeping victory of President Roosevelt, but money played a very important part. It was there, billions of it. Some of it went for real improvements, some for boondoggling, much for patronage. But the New Deal's expenditures for relief were its most paying investment. Whether the money went into PWA, WPA or direct relief, it was effective. The recipients were assured that the largess would stop flowing if Mr. Roosevelt were beaten. * * *

Another important element in the President's triumph was the partial return to prosperity. * * * much to do with the result. * * * Mr. Roosevelt's personality had Will he take it for granted that the vote was an unlimited grant of power to continue the experimentation which was so bold and often so futile? * * * If the President thinks these things, he is unwise.

NEW YORK WORLD-TELEGRAM.

(Independent, supported Roosevelt.)

Roosevelt's problems from here on are as big and as trying as time ever produced. * * *

Whether he lives up to the magnitude of his chance, as he has in his first four years, will be determined, we believe, in a very large degree by whether he has within him that rare capacity to rise above those perfectly human impulses which prevent most great men from attaining the full measure of their opportunity. * * *

There is much to be done; so many things of so infinitely greater importance than the spanking of a lot of pot-bellied bourbons who lost their balance. * * * The depression has often been likened in its seriousness to a war. Let there be no dark days in this reconstruction.

LOSE FAT THE EASY WAY
Without Starvation Diets, or Back-Breaking, Bending and Rolling Exercises.

Here's a way to get rid of ugly fat that works hand in hand with Nature. Millions of people are losing millions of pounds of flabby flesh and getting back slender figures, without the need of starvation diets or back-breaking exercises.

Medical science has discovered that one of the causes of too much fat lies in a little gland. It is the duty of this tiny gland to make about one drop and a half every day of a vital fluid. This helps the body "burn" up food and excess fatty tissues just as a good draft of air helps the furnace to burn up coal without forming "clinkers." If this little gland doesn't make this drop and a half of fluid every 24 hours, many people take on ugly fat.

Doctors correct this condition by feeding this little gland the substance it lacks—and Marmola Prescription Tablets are based on this same method. Millions are using them with success. They are prepared by a world-famous medical laboratory. Their formula is published in every package so you know what you are taking.

So don't waste time and money with starvation diets or back-breaking exercises. Go to your druggist today and get a box of Marmola. Try this simple, easy way to get rid of excess fat. (Adv.)

By Samuel Lubell.

Asks Redeemed Pledges.

Democratic cheers of victory still were ringing in the air yesterday, when Luther C. Steward, president of the National Federation of Federal Employes, called for redemption of pledges to extend and to strengthen the merit system.

"Our fundamental objective" Steward said, "is the extension and strengthening of the merit system. To this, virtually every candidate for national office in the election was pledged. Redemption of that pledge now is definitely in order.

"The merit system issue without question takes precedence in importance over all others, because of its basic nature. Other vital objectives, however, include extension of classification to the field service; a minimum wage of $1,500 for all adult, full time employes; optional retirement after 30 years service; establishment of a central personnel agency; civil service court of appeals, and liberalization of retirement.

"The attainment of these and other legislative objectives of the National Federation of Federal Employes will mean much to the taxpayers of the United States in improving the whole level of efficiency within the Federal service."

Great was the jubilation in the various emergency agencies yesterday. Fears of an economy program had been swept away, temporarily at least, in the election landslide. Employes in the agencies which expire next June were confident their jobs would be perpetuated either through new legislation extending the life of their departments or by transfer to old line departments.

Greatest enthusiasm was shown by the division and bureau chiefs. Not many were in a mood for work and their subordinates had ample time to swap stories of their trips home to the polls.

The Procurement Orchestra of the Procurement Welfare Association of the Treasury Department presented its first concert of the winter season in the Agriculture Department Auditorium last night with Leo G. D. Wiemer conducting. Guest soloist was Arthur Tabbutt, basso.

The orchestra won enthusiastic applause for its rendition of a varied program interspersed with the music of Wagner, Jarnefelt, Mozart, Hadley, Grieg, Von Suppe Bach, Rubenstein and Herbert.

Miss Marie Margaret Elsworth, writer and daughter of R. H. Elsworth, of the Farm Credit Administration, will address a meeting of the Washington Consumers Club, a Rochdale co-operative, in the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, 1410 Columbia road northwest, at 8 p. m. Wednesday.

Fred Orsinger, director of the aquarium, in an interview with Ady Gilmore, of the Associated Press, yesterday rallied to the defense of the catfish, long dubbed a lowbrow because of a receding forehead. "You've got to go deeper than looks to learn the truth about this really intelligent fish," Orsinger said. As an indication of the intelligence of catfish, Orsinger pointed out, they hide on the bottom of streams and ponds, covering themselves with the warmest thing in sight—soft mud. "That might not sound so nice," said the Government fish man, "but I call it smart."

Flora Collection Arrives.

The Smithsonian Institution has just received for study and identification of specimens, part of the celebrated Sesse and Mocino collection of the flora of Mexico, which recently came to light in Madrid after more than a century. The collection was sent by Spanish officials just before the outbreak of the revolution to Dr. Paul Standley, of the Field Museum of Natural History in Chicago, foremost authority on the plants of Mexico. Dr. Standley has distributed it to American institutions specializing in various plant families represented.

D. C. Friends In Congress Are Returned

All but One Member of Sympathetic Bloc Re-elected.

Mary Norton Expected to Head Committee for District.

As its legislative champions emerged unscathed from the election upheaval, the District yesterday looked forward hopefully to submitting its problems next year to the most sympathetic Congress it has dealt with in a long time.

Representative Mary T. Norton, District Committee, won a sweeping victory in New Jersey and all of her committee supporters, with the exception of Representative Randolph Carpenter, of Kansas, were returned by their constituents. Representative Carpenter did not run for re-election.

The only member of the District Committee who met defeat at the polls was Representative Clare Fenerty (Republican), of Pennsylvania. He was defeated by M. F. Bradley, Democrat.

Representative George W. Johnson (Democrat), of Parkersburg, W. Va., who is in line for the chairmanship of the locally important House District Appropriations Committee, was swept back into office in the Democratic landslide.

The defeat of Representative Florence Kahn (Republican), of California, only woman member of the powerful appropriations committee, gave rise to speculation over the possibility that Mrs. Norton might be rewarded with that vacancy if she desired to relinquish her chairmanship of the District Committee.

Returning for her seventh term, Mrs. Norton is the veteran member of the House Democratic feminine bloc. Mrs. Edith Nourse Rogers, of Massachusetts, is the only woman who has served in the House as long as Mrs. Norton.

Because of her intense interest in local affairs and her pride in being the only woman committee chairman in Congress, it is considered unlikely that Mrs. Norton would leave the District Committee even if she were offered the coveted Appropriations Committee assignment.

Sisson Race Undecided.

The fate of Representative Fred J. Sisson (Republican), instigator and leader of the fight to repeal the little red rider at the last session, still was undetermined in the Thirty-third New York District late last night.

Sisson's political enemies capitalized on his fight to restore academic freedom to District school teachers and re-echoed former Representative Blanton's charges that any foe of the red rider was a friend of communism.

The Washington Central Labor Union and the Teachers Union sent telegrams of indorsement into Sisson's district in an effort to counteract the propaganda of his foes.

Defeat of Sisson, political observers pointed out, might frighten timid House members away from support of the red rider repeal bill when it is re-introduced at the next session. Representative Norton has promised that the repeal bill will be placed first on the agenda of the District Committee at the next session.

Two new Democratic members must be assigned to the House District Appropriations Committee at the next session to fill vacancies caused by the defeat of Blanton in Texas and the death of Representative Jacobsen, of Iowa.

Friends of the District were paying close attention to the campaign in the Sixteenth Pennsylvania District, where Representative Robert Rich, Republican enthusiastic ally of Blanton in his attacks on the District, was fighting for his political life.

Tabor Re-elected.

Representative John Tabor (R), of New York, member of the House Appropriations Committee, who supported Blanton in his battles to slash the District budget, was re-elected, as were Representative Ditter (R), of Pennsylvania, and Representative Dirkson (R), of Illinois, both active in local affairs.

Representative U. S. Guyer (R), of Kansas, author of the bill to restore prohibition to the District, was re-elected.

Senator Robert D. Carey, of Wyoming, member of the special commission appointed to recommend an airport site for the District and an active member of the Senate District Committee, was defeated.

The airport commission is instructed to make its recommendations to the next session of Congress. Its members were appointed by the President.

Two other vacancies on the Senate District Committee were created through the defeat of the late Senator James Couzens (R), of Michigan, and Thomas P. Gore (D), of Oklahoma. Both were defeated in the primaries.

'Unpronounceable' Dog's Boss Freed Of Threat Charge

Theodore Brock, colored houseman and master of the hound, Aldebarontofoscoforlia Chrononthotonthologos, for Miss Violet Biddle, 1823 Q street northwest, was acquitted in Police Court of a threat charge by Judge Edward M. Curran yesterday.

The charge was dismissed after testimony revealed the complainant, a paid police informer, had obtained employment in the homes of several prominent Washingtonians to secure information with which to trap gaming law violators.

Brock was charged with setting up a gaming table and released under $1,500 bond for the grand jury last week when he was arrested for allegedly writing "numbers" in the servants' quarters of Miss Biddle's home.

The threat charge against Brock grew out of alleged remarks made against the complainant. Sergt. George C. Deyoe testified Brock had threatened "to get the informer even if he had to serve 20 years for it."

Capital Jurors Indict Suspect In Poker Killing

Prisoner Accused of Slaying Mrs. Goodwin, U. S. Employe.

Accused of the slaying of Mrs. Florence Goodwin, 43-year-old Government employe and rooming house proprietress of 1102 Sixteenth street northwest, Norman W. Robinson, colored, 27, yesterday was indicted by the District grand jury on a charge of first degree murder.

Arrested and questioned after police had found allegedly incriminating evidence in his room, Robinson is said to have confessed he broke into the rooming house, attempted to rob Mrs. Goodwin and beat her fatally with an iron furnace poker. He obtained only a few pennies from her purse. The slaying occurred September 18.

Accused by police of plotting with two colored men to hold up Israel Orlove, O Street Market merchant, Mrs. Virginia Joseph, 18, a cafe hostess, was indicted along with her alleged accomplices for robbery. The men are John Harris and Clarence L. Mitchell.

Robbed of $1,400.

Orlove told police Mitchell robbed him of $1,400 October 18, shortly after midnight, just after he had left his place of business. Mrs. Joseph and Harris allegedly were waiting in the car in which Mitchell made his getaway.

Another indictment presented to Justice Peyton Gordon yesterday charged Theodore Padgett, colored, with murdering Ida Virginia Wigenton, also colored, at her home, 3013 Sherman avenue northwest, last September. He is said to have attacked the woman with an ax.

Alleged to have violated the narcotic act, three men said to have frequented Judiciary Square were charged with violations of the Harrison narcotic act. They were Charles H. Johnson, John Joseph Hand and Raymond Hitte. All were arrested in mid-summer after "informers" had made purchases of alleged "dope" from them.

Troup Indicted.

Those indicted were James Skirty, non-support; John Harris, Clarence L. Mitchell, Virginia Joseph, James Ross, John Davis, James Spicer, James H. Winbrake, Roscoe Barnes, Frances Henson, Andy Laderas, robbery; Alma P. Campbell, William Jackson, Amos Epps and LeRoy Murray, assault with a dangerous weapon.

Ban Is Lifted On Graduate Pupils Here

Non-Residents Eligible on Basis of Kemp Rule, Ballou Decides.

Several Outside Pupils Gain Admittance to City Schools.

Following its action last week in admitting nonresident pupils to District public schools pending the outcome of a Court of Appeals ruling, the Board of Education yesterday lifted a ban against postgraduate students, who, though nonresidents, have parents employed in the District.

Supporting the recommendation of Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, the board voted to admit all nonresident postgraduate applicants on the condition that they enroll in schools and classes not already overcrowded.

Board members insisted school authorities were under no obligation to accommodate children who are more than 16 years old or who have received a high school diploma. Dr. Ballou, however, declared it was inconsistent to give nonresident pupils equal admission rights with resident pupils and then deny enrollment to eligible nonresident students who wish to return to school for postgraduate work.

Resident high school graduates have been entitled to come back to school for classes in which there was room for them.

Kemp Case Report.

The board received the statement of Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal in which the school trustees were advised to enter Lois Kemp, 11-year-old nonresident Clarendon, Va., girl, until January 31. The board already had acted in favor of the recommendation through a special poll last week, and Lois returned to school Monday.

Dr. Ballou advised the board that in addition to the Kemp girl, "about six or eight" other nonresident pupils have been admitted to District schools this week.

Lois Kemp, whose father is employed as a PWA disbursing officer, was denied admittance to Gordon Junior High School because of overcrowding last September. Subsequently she won a District Court ruling in favor of her petition for a writ of mandamus to compel Dr. Ballou to enroll her. The case is now before the District Court of Appeals.

Brougher Appointed.

John F. Brougher, statistician in the District schools, was appointed assistant principal of Central High School. He succeeds Lawrence C. Hoover, who last month was promoted to the principalship of the school.

Brougher has been with the local school system a year. He accepted the statistician's position last November. He came here from Pennsylvania, where he had been adviser of secondary education in the State department of public education. His professional career began in 1926, when he became a social studies instructor in Jermyn, Pa. Subsequently he held instructorships and supervising principalships in that community and in Clarks Summit, Pa. He is a graduate of Columbia University.

Board approval was given a supervised study experiment proposed for Alice Deal Junior High School by Miss Bertie Backus, principal. Robert A. Maurer, who had originally opposed the plan, withdrew his opposition, explaining he was confident it would not work a hardship on the pupils.

Boy Club Head Is Transferred By Police Chief

Precinct Detective John P. Meshkoff, "for reasons not to be made public," was relieved from duty as director of the Metropolitan Police Boys Club and athletic instructor in the police school.

Maj. Brown ordered Meshkoff from the detail and transferred him to duty in the Third Precinct, but Maj. Brown said he did not wish to divulge the reason for the change.

Sergt. J. E. Scott, of the Second Precinct, formerly director of the District schoolboy patrol system, who was awarded a distinguished service cross in the World War, was assigned to take up Meshkoff's duties. Maj. Brown said Sergt. Scott is well fitted for the position.

Private John O. Hite, of the Traffic Division, was transferred to the Second Precinct as an acting sergeant to fill the vacancy left by Scott. Private William Sanders was made an acting sergeant.

Meanwhile, rumors in detective headquarters point toward a major reorganization of the present assignments of detective sergeants who are working from the various precincts and squads.

Although, Detective Chief Bernard W. Thompson refused to either deny or confirm any prospective changes, it is believed many transfers will take place in the near future. One detective sergeant will be appointed to fill the position left open by the death of Detective Sergt. Arthur T. Fihelly.

Citizens Group Opposes Boost In Gasoline Tax

Revenues Exceed Cost of Road Upkeep, Oldest Inhabitants Say.

Declaring that additional levies "would kill the goose that laid the golden egg," the Association of Oldest Inhabitants last night adopted a resolution opposing any increase in gasoline taxes here.

Gasoline already is heavily taxed and revenues exceed cost of upkeep and proposed construction work on the highways for which the money is expended, the association contended. Should we have additional tolls levied on gasoline, one member said, citizens might take to riding bicycles or driving midget cars as in England and on the Continent where fuel prices are high.

The association voted to send flowers to Mr. and Mrs. Johan C. Kondrup, of 3012 Cambridge place northwest, who are celebrating their golden wedding anniversary.

In a short talk, James F. Duhamel took the assembly on a verbal tour of the forts of old Washington. Beginning at American University he described interesting bulwarks of the Civil War period found along the outskirts of the District, ending at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, site of Fort Carroll. Fort Carroll, Duhamel said, was the only Civil War defense which today still contains a powder magazine, intact as the day it was built.

Police Launch Drive on Coal Bootleggers

Brown Orders Campaign After Protests From Association.

Directs Men to Get All Information Possible on Violations.

A concerted drive against coal "bootleggers" in the District was ordered yesterday by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police.

Maj. Brown acted on advice from the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, which said thousands of tons of coal were being taken from the mines, trucked over the roads and highways and sold to Washingtonians by "fly by night" coal dealers, who have no licenses.

License fees for coal dealers in the District are $10 per year. This covers the cost of inspection.

In a general memorandum to his department, Maj. Brown recalled that the coal division of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association was anxious that everything possible be done by authorities here to protect consumers as well as merchants.

Prices Below Standard.

Cool weather and approaching winter brings the coal "bootleggers" from the mining regions in large numbers, and in many cases, after drives over mountain roads, they sell their coal in the residential districts at prices below the standard for legitimate, licensed coal dealers, the association said.

Maj. Brown called attention to the general order of the Commissioners in his memorandum to the police.

"The Commissioners, having determined that the business of selling coal requires inspection, supervision and regulation, and that the cost of the inspection, supervision and regulation of dealers in coal required by the municipal agencies is $10 per annum, it is thereby ordered that dealers in coal shall pay a license fee of $10 per annum, effective on and after March 1, 1935," said the order of the Commissioners.

Addressed to commanding officers in the precincts and at headquarters, Maj. Brown's memorandum said:

"Your attention is invited to the memorandum order in which license fees for coal dealers is set at $10 per annum, effective on and after March 1, 1935.

"You will direct the members of your command to notify all coal dealers in your precinct that licenses must be obtained within ten days.

Letter of Occupation.

"Where dealers receive orders over the telephone at their residences, the same would be deemed home occupation, but they would be liable for license and should apply to the building inspector's office for a letter of occupation."

Maj. Brown added that police should give the matter special attention at this season of the year.

"When a trucker is found who apparently is violating the regulation," he said, "all information possible should be secured in the case and presented to the corporation counsel with a view of prosecution."

Chaplain Transferred.

The War Department has ordered Chaplain Frank H. Hayes of the United States Army, previously assigned to duty at Langley Field, Va., to report at Fort Thomas, Ky., upon completion of his present tour of foreign service. Hayes' home is in Petersburg, Va., according to the Associated Press.

District Fans to Flock to Navy-Notre Dame 'Consolation' Battle

Champ

One Dean Detton Says He's It, and Gives Some Divers Data.

By Jack Cuddy.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

New York, Nov. 4.—"Meet the champeen," sad Ned Brown.

I pulled a boner and asked, "champeen of what?"

The slender semi-bald Brown, who handles publicity for Dempsey's, reddened up like one of those flowers in a snow movie. And the husky, brown-haired guy at the table with him got red and flustered too. It was a most unfortunate moment.

Brown, mad as a smoked-out hornet, cleared his throat and said, "this is Dean Detton, world heavyweight wrestling champion—if you must know. You remember——"

No, I didn't remember. I said I thought Ali Baba—no Dave Levin—was world heavyweight wrestling champion in most places, but I admitted that, because of the election, etc., I had not been following the mad men of the mat for the last few days, and that in the interim even a Detton might have dethroned the mighty Levin.

Brown accepted my apology, ordered me to sit down, and said, "His father was a wrestler, too."

Shrewd Ned knew he had me there—knew he had me intrigued by that remark. Because so often in the past we had marveled at the fact that in breeding horses you expected a fast-stepping son to follow in the hoof marks of a fast-stepping father. But that in athletics few fathers of prowess ever begat famous sons.

So I said to the husky guy with the curly brown hair, Sing Sing chin and fist-like cauliflowered ears, "So your dad was a wrestler—eh?"

Detton puffed out his chest and said, "Yes he was—and a good one, too. Only a lightweight, but he met and beat the best of them at all weights—catchweights they called it in those days—fellows like Jack Harbetson, Pete Visser, Mike Yokeo, Mike Nichelson and Henry Jones. They were good wrestlers out there in the West in those days."

Oh—so Detton came from the West? What part? "Utah," said the champ. "I'm a Mormon. My grandparents came to Utah with Brigham Young. My father and mother were born in Utah. And I've got two sisters and seven brothers—and every one of those brothers were wrestlers."

I said that must be some sort of a record—for a father who was a professional grappler to turn out eight wrestlers. Dean said maybe it was, because the family was raised on a sugar beet farm near Richmond in Utah. He said that next to Nebraska he figured Utah turned out more wrestlers than any other State.

"Incidentally," I remarked, "when and where did you become champion, Mr. Detton?" It is by asking little questions like this that I managed to become a storehouse of sports information.

Detton ground his nice white teeth, glared at Brown and made the best of it.

"I won the title from Dave Levin in Philadelphia on the night of September 28," he said. "Yes, it was this year. I made him quit with a step-over toehold."

I gasped in amazement. "A step-over toehold! Why—that's the same old-fashioned hold that Frank Gotch used. Why, that's the thing Gotch beat Hackenschmidt with in their London match. Is that your best hold? Haven't you got anything modern and snappy like an Indian death grip, an Irish whip, or airplane scissors?"

The brawny Mr. Detton rose from his chair and I could see that he was smiling merely to conceal the steam of his anger. He chuckled when he said, "let us retire to the men's room and I will show you exactly how I apply the step-over. You really cannot appreciate its effectiveness until I demonstrate it."

Twin Court Bills Scheduled in N. Y.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 4.—Ned Irish, basketball promoter, announced today a schedule of 11 intercollegiate doubleheaders to be held in Madison Square Garden during the forthcoming winter season.

The schedule will bring 13 teams into the garden from outside the State, nine of them for the first time. The new-comers include Stanford, Utah State, Depaul, George Washington, Ohio State, Indiana, St. Joseph's of Philadelphia, Georgetown and Washington & Lee.

Pitt Will Take It Easy In Penn State Contest

Pittsburgh, Nov. 4 (AP).—Observers predicted tonight the University of Pittsburgh's Panthers will play no harder than necessary to win Saturday against the grid team of Penn State.

The reason, they said, is because the Penn State game is regarded as a "breather" for the Panthers, who may need rest and plenty of reserve the succeeding Saturday against Nebraska.

Michigan Unperturbed Over Game With Penn

Ann Arbor, Nov. 4 (AP).—Coach Harry Kipke announced tonight that he would take 29 Michigan players to Philadelphia for the intersectional clash with Pennsylvania next Saturday. He said none was perturbed about the reported wide-open attack planned by the Quakers. The squad expects to keep the Wolverine record of not an intersectional defeat since 1926 clean.

Smith Plans to Revamp Villanova's Backfield

Villanova, Pa., Nov. 4 (AP).—Coach Maurice (Clipper) Smith, of Villanova College, said today he might revamp his starting backfield for the South Carolina game Saturday at Columbia, S. C.

Grimes Is Held Likely To Get Brooklyn Post

Selection of a Manager for Dodgers Is to Be Made Today.

By the United Press.

New York, Nov. 4.—The Brooklyn Dodgers will name a new manager tomorrow to succeed deposed Casey Stengel. Most baseball writers in the metropolitan area believe this thirteenth pilot of the Gowanus gamboliers will be Burleigh (Stubble-Beard) Grimes.

If Mr. Grimes—the well known pig farmer of New Haven, Mo., and erstwhile major league spitball twirler gets the job, it will be the second time that the Dodgers have traded Stengel for Grimes.

Battling Burleigh, who has been called the Gulliver of the national pastime because he bounced around so much from club to club, figured in the first Stengel deal back in January, 1918. Brooklyn got Grimes, Pitcher Al Mamaux and Infielder Chuck Ward from the Pittsburgh Pirates for Stengel, Second Baseman George Cutshaw and a wad of cash.

At that time Mr. Grimes was considered merely a "throw-in" in the deal that gave the Dodgers Mamaux, a fast-ball pitcher who had been a 20-game winner for the Pirates. But Burleigh blossomed out in Flatbush and became one of the most effective flingers in the league. He remained with the Dodgers nine seasons and was a heroic figure among Brooklyn fans. It is largely because of this personal popularity that he is figured to have the job sewed up, rather than because of any great showing he made this season as manager of the Louisville Club of the American Association.

Louisville finished seventh in the pennant race, but Burleigh probably established a new record in the circuit as an umpire baiter. It is understood that in preliminary conferences with Dodger officials, "Stubble-Beard" promised that he will be more considerate of the umpires if given the job as manager.

BURLEIGH GRIMES.

Of course, this Grimes-for-Stengel affair really is not a trade, because poor Case was fired during the World Series because the Dodgers had done poorly. Then the Ebbets' Field brass hats started searching for a successor.

After a flock of candidates were considered, three men remained as outstanding prospects—Grimes, Rogers Hornsby, manager of the St. Louis Browns, and Ray Blades, whose ability as leader had been tested at Rochester.

During his 19 years in the majors, Grimes pitched for the Pirates, Dodgers, Giants, Braves, Cardinals and Cubs—some of them twice. He is 43 years old.

Dartmouth Leading In 'Ivy' League Race

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 4.—With three victories under their belts, the Dartmouth football Indians lead the "Ivy College League" and appear to stand at least a 50-50 chance of capturing their three remaining games, duplicating Princeton's 1935 all-conquering "league" record.

The Hanover Tribesmen already have accounted for the scalps of Harvard, Brown and Yale, winning by an aggregate score of 71 to 14, and startin Saturday, will meet Columbia, Cornell and Princeton on successive Saturdays.

Columbia and Princeton tripped up the Indians in their last two games a year ago after they had knocked off four straight opponents. Coach Earl Blaik's huskies appear stronger than last year while Princeton has been moving like a shadow of the unbeaten 1935 eleven and Columbia is sorely lacking in reserve material.

Army, which plays an abbreviated "league" schedule of only three games, also is undefeated in its first two starts, with victories over Columbia and Harvard. The soldiers final opponent will be their service rivals, the Navy Midshipmen.

Yale and Penn are tied for third place with three victories and one defeat each. From a league standpoint, both are vastly improved over last year, when the Elis broke even in their first four games and Penn dropped three of her first four.

With only Cornell remaining on her league schedule, the best batting average Penn can hope to attain is an even 800 per cent. Yale's remaining assignment is much touchier, with Brown, Princeton and Harvard coming up in that order. A victorious finish would give the Blues an average of .857.

The group standing:

	Won.	Lost.	Tied.
Dartmouth	3	..	..
Army	2	..	..
Yale	3	1	..
Pennsylvania	3	1	..
Columbia	1	1	..
Harvard	1	2	1
Cornell	..	2	..
Navy	..	3	..
Brown	..	3	..

Feary Will Enter Golden Glove Bout

Willie Feary, the lightweight amateur who was making quite a name for himself a few months back, will return to the wars in the District golden glove tournament, which begins at the Catholic University gymnasium next Tuesday night.

Willie will be dropped into the vacancy left in the National Guard team when Lou Gevinson turns professional. Lou already has informed those running the guard team that he will not be available as an amateur when the tournament starts.

Feary quit the ring game when the official deciders awarded Leon Shub a decision over him in the second annual golden glove tournament. He then turned his attention to the gridiron, where, as a halfback on Joe Busch's Palace A. C. team, he became as formidable as he had been in the ring.

Lucas Abandons Half Job for Fight

With Phil Furr having agreed to meet Johnny Lucas in a 15-round return fuss at Turner's Arena next Monday night, Lucas yesterday got down to serious work by giving up half of his job.

Johnny, it seems, is an ironworker by trade. As such, he works many hours a day, which is the only reason he can think of for his being in shape after a two-year layoff.

Now, to give himself more time to train, Lucas is working only a half-day five days a week. He devotes the other half of his day to gymnasium training and road work.

Two Deaf Schools Meet for 1st Time

History will be made at Kendall Green Saturday, where the Fanwood School for Deaf, of New York, tangles with the West Virginia School for Deaf, in the first game ever played on the green by two deaf elevens.

Coached by "Tex" Gamblin, former Gallaudet luminary, and Ed Danowski, New York Giant star, Fanwood reigns a distinct favorite over the West Virginians, who only recently placed football on their sports calendar. An alumnus, of Pittsburgh, Joe Schwarzkopf, coaches the team.

Teddy Hughes, director of athletics at Gallaudet, is in charge of arrangements for the game. Proceeds will be donated to the local school's athletic fund.

Vanzo, Not Toth, Beat Minnesota

By Paul Mickelson.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, Nov. 4.—Down the sports trail for a check of college football's "unsung heroes," plodding stars who are invaluable, but who usually find their names somewhere in the fifteenth paragraph of Sunday's big smash stories:

Wildcat . . . Fred Vanzo, the son of a Hoosier miner, hasn't carried the ball once for Northwestern this season although he's a 215-pound quarterback. Yet he's probably the greatest Wildcat of them all, employing his terrific power to open gaps for Don Geyer and Steve Toth. His great charges beat Ohio State and Minnesota. His greatness on defense was astounding against Minnesota. Definitely, he was the difference between defeat and victory.

Huskie . . . In the camp of Washington's Huskies, they unhesitatingly nominate Bud Douglas, an end who weighs 172 and stands 6 feet. For two years Bud slaved with the scrubs, taking beatings every practice session and watching the "big shots" from the bench on Saturday afternoons. He got his first real chance in the U. C. L. A. game and delivered like Man 'o War. As he was about to snatch a pass in the end zone, Merle Harris, U. C. L. A. quarterback, batted the ball. But long practice beatings taught Bud to be alert. He saw the ball go up, instead of down, and he leaped into the air and snagged it to clinch victory. After that Bud didn't have to read so much to find his name.

Big Wave . . . Tulane's charm of always possessing a great center appeared broken this year, when Coach Red Dawson decided to convert Noel Loftin into a back. Porter Tull, weighing but 170 pounds and not very fast, had a lot of spirit and had been plugging along with the scrubs, but nobody gave him a tumble. But with two other center prospects injured, Tull was started against Ole Miss. Tull, a scholarly fellow, did the rest, ripping the opposition to shreds and missing but 27 minutes in six games. After the Colgate game, several Red Raiders were overheard to remark:

"That Tull. I can see him yet. What a center!"

Gophers . . . Minnesota's "unsung heroes" come in job lots. They are the Bombers, ineligibles and fellows not good enough to make the varsity. They are the "enemy" in daily scrimmages. Minnesota "cannon fodder." The Bombers have their own "jeering section." A man who can't take it gets jeered by them. He has to be really injured to get a rest from the poundings. Their motto, often shouted, is: "Let's die for old coachie!" But out of their ranks come some of Minnesota's greatest stars.

The Bombers can take it and give it. They often wow Coach Bernie Bierman with their spirit and wise cracks. The prize comment of the season was heard one day when after a particularly poor attempt at a tackle, the offending Bomber halfback got up, his ears burning from the tongue lashing an assistant coach was giving him.

"Yes," gulped the offender, "and if you were Bierman you wouldn't be coaching lousy ball players like me."

Left-Handed Golfer Gets 218-Yard Hole in One

A left-handed golfer used a driver on a 218-yard hole yesterday and scored a hole-in-one.

D. C. Ban Seen Bar to Lewis In England

Lightheavy's Suspension by Local Body May Be Upheld There.

Order Will Remain in Effect Until He Fights Williams Here.

By Bill McCormick.

The long arm of organized boxing control reached out yesterday to push John Henry Lewis out of an important fight and some big money in England as the lightheavyweight champion was suspended by order of the District Boxing Commission.

Lewis' suspension was imposed because the colored ruler of the 175-pound division failed to appear here against Tiger Roy Williams October 13. The ban against John Henry is automatically effective in 35 States, two cities and several countries affiliated with the National Boxing Association, of which the local governing board of beak-biffing is a member.

England, where Lewis is scheduled to meet Len Harvey November 9, has a working agreement with the N. B. A. which makes it almost imperative that the suspension be recognized in that country.

Bout Set for October 13.

The Lewis-Harvey bout was originally scheduled for November 3, but was postponed. Reports from London indicate that the bout will—or would have—drawn a very large gate.

Lewis agreed to fight Roy Williams at Griffith Stadium here October 13. The bout was sanctioned by the Boxing Commission and advertised. Later, Lewis' manager, W. A. Greenlee, advised the commission that, because of an oversight, he had failed to note that his fighter's contract for the London bout called for his appearance there in advance, which would have been impossible had the Washington fight gone through as scheduled.

The commission advised Greenlee that he would be required to box here November 25. Greenlee asked to be permitted to change that definite date to "Lewis' first bout in the United States upon his return from England;" he would amend the contract accordingly and return it to the commission.

Must Fill Contract.

This was agreed upon, but Greenlee has never returned the signed contract, thus arousing the ire of the commissioners. That Lewis had agreed to fight here is proved—to the satisfaction of the commission, at least—by numerous telegrams and letters.

The suspension is effective until Lewis fulfills his contract to box for Promoters Earl McDonald and Walter Young on a date and place mutually agreed upon.

The National Boxing Association suspension automatically applies in every State in which boxing is legalized except New York, Pennsylvania, California, Arizona, Florida, Maine, New Hampshire, New Mexico and Vermont. The cities of Miami Beach and Montreal are affiliated with the N. A. A. and will recognize the ban.

Beside England, the N. B. A. has working agreements with Italy, Canada, Massachusetts and New Hampshire, all of which may recognize the suspension.

Cuba, Hawaii, Mexico, Porto Rico and Quebec are members of the N. B. A. and, as such, will be forced to impose the ban in their territories.

East Triumphs In New York Horse Show

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 4.—The fifty-first National Horse Show, opening its seven-day stand in Madison Square Garden, lost no time living up to its name today as equine bluebloods from almost every section of the country scored in the opening skirmishes in the blue ribbon battle.

The East, having majority of the 537 entries, carried off the greater part of the honors at the matinee session. Other sections were well represented in the victory column, however, by Judy King, the South's foremost whip from Atlanta; Mrs. Raymond Morris, a newcomer from Coronada, Calif.; Mrs. Elsworth Augustus, of Willoughby, Ohio, and the Delaine Farm, of Glenview, Ill.

Miss King, runner-up to Frances Dodge, of Rochester, Mich., for blue ribbon honors last year, got the jump on her Midwestern rival when she sent out Knight Bachelor, best of the 1935 harness horses, to take the measure of Miss Dodge's Shalimar, winner of four championships at other shows this year. Shalimar, a beautiful chestnut mare, was the favorite.

The East's blue ribbons were won by Alfred B. Maclay, master of the Killearn Farm of Millbrook, N. Y.; J. Macey Willets' Cassilis Farm of New Marlborough, N. Y.; Adrian van Sinderen of Washington, Conn.; R. R. M. Carpenter, owner of the Dilwyne Farm of Montchanin, Del., and George Hurley, of New York.

Mrs. John Hay Whitney rode a pair of her famous jumpers to first and third places in the class calling out thoroughbred hunters. She took first place on Grey Knight and finished third with Spring Hope. Chatter Chat, owned by Mrs. Ellsworth Augustus, of Willoughby, Ohio, split the Whitney combination while fourth went to Holystone from Carpenter's Dilwyne Farms.

Democrats Elect Vic Aldridge to Indiana Senate

Terre Haute, Ind., Nov. 4 (AP).—Vic Aldridge, the old "Hoosier schoolmaster" pitcher of the National League for nearly ten years, was elected to the Indiana Senate on the Democratic ticket yesterday.

Since quitting baseball several years ago, Aldridge has been operating a grocery store here and studying law. He got his degree a short time ago.

Aldridge pitched for the Chicago Cubs, Pittsburgh Pirates and the New York Giants, retiring in 1928. He became known as the "Hoosier schoolmaster" because he taught school for a time during the winter months.

Jannazzo Gets Shot at Ross' Welter Title

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 4.—Izzy Jannazzo, East Side welterweight, was virtually promised a November 27 title shot with Barney Ross by the New York State Athletic Commission today.

Jannazzo and Ceferino Garcia, West Coast contender, fought last week for the right to meet Ross. The bout ended in a draw.

If Ross is agreeable and will assure the commission he will give Garcia an early chance at the title if Jannazzo is defeated, the New Yorker will get the first shot rather than have to go through a return match with Garcia.

Garcia's eyes were badly cut in the Jannazzo bout. Two physicians today advised that he let them heal completely before returning to the ring.

Gevinson Wins Last Amateur Ring Bout

In what was advertised as positively his last amateur ring appearance, Lou Gevinson scored an unimpressive victory over one Mike Koerner, of Norfolk, in the feature of the National Guard boxing show at Turner's Arena last night.

The bout was halted after 2 minutes and 40 seconds of the third round as Koerner went down without being hit and Referee Muggsy Morris stopped the bout.

The first time he kissed the floor was in the third, when he dropped for an eight-count as the result of a short left hook to the chin. A few seconds later, Koerner fell from the force of a missed punch—and stayed down for nine. A second or two later he went down for no count from a powder-puff wallop and then he simply sat down and waited for Morris to run up the flag of truce.

120-pound class—Eddie Saurstad, National Guard, won decision from Brooks Bowen, Richmond.

130-pound class—Lou Gevinson, National Guard, knocked out Mike Koerner, Norfolk, 2 minutes and 40 seconds of the third round.

135-pound class—Willie Feary, National Guard, won decision from Newsboy Coates.

140-pound class—Ray Crombie, National Guard, won decision from Jack Mathews, Richmond.

150-pound class—Hunter Crostic, Richmond, won decision from Bob Mathias, National Guard. Bingo Evans, Norfolk, knocked out Steve Thompson, National Guard, 2 minutes and 45 seconds of the third round.

160-pound class—Angelo Januzzi, Richmond, won decision from Creighton Allen, Northeast Boys Club.

185-pound class—Maynard Daniels, Marine Reserves, knocked out Harvey Clopton, Richmond, 2 minutes and 40 seconds of the first round.

Irish to Drill Here Before Contest

The greatest outpouring of Washington football fans for an attraction on a foreign field this season is scheduled for Saturday when Notre Dame's rambling eleven meets up with Navy at Baltimore Municipal Stadium.

No clash of unbeaten teams, but a traditionally popular battle with Washington fans, the Navy-Notre Dame game again looms as a sell-out. Forty-eight thousand of the 60,000 seats have already been sold at prices ranging from $1.11 to $4.44 and Naval Academy authorities last night reported that only a few of the $3.33 tickets remained, and 10,000 selling for $2.22.

Washington tomorrow will be host to the Notre Dame squad which will detrain here this morning and stage a workout at the Georgetown Preparatory School field at Garrett Park, Md.

Both Seek Prestige.

Both Navy and Notre Dame will be striving on Saturday to salvage a bit of prestige from campaigns which have been none too successful. Navy, beaten in succession by Yale, Princeton and Penn, will count its season something of a success if it can defeat the Irish.

Notre Dame's season already has bee marred by the 26-to-0 defeat at the hands of Pittsburgh, the worst beating absorbed by the Irish since the Army game 11 years ago.

Coach Tom Hamilton, of Navy, yesterday adopted a more cheery outlook as the game neared. His first-line defense, one of the team's weaknesses in the Penn game, has been strengthened immeasurably by the return of Miller to the center post.

Miller has been discharged from the hospital after treatment for an infection. Flanking him on Saturday will be Dubois and Morrell, guards; Ferraro and Hensel, tackles, and Soucek and Player, ends. Antrim, Case, Schmidt and Ingram are slated to start in the backfield.

South Bend, Ind., Nov. 4 (AP).—Coach Elmer Layden drilled the Notre Dame gridmen today on the protection of the kicker, something which he said the Irish failed to do against Ohio State last week. Layden, apparently worried over the way Joe O'Neill gets away punts, warned that the Navy linemen charge hard and low.

Marching Home, Odds-On, Gallops to Victory in Pimlico Sprint

Filly in Lead From Start To Finish

Lemont Places Second; Shogun, 4-1, Wins Steeplechase.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Pimlico Race Track, Nov. 4.—Marching Home, a sprightly daughter of John P. Grier, ran away with the San Souci Purse, the feature of today's program at this ancient and honorable race track. Flying the colors of the Middleburg Stable, Marching Home was in front from the moment that Starter Milton pressed his finger on the starting button to the imaginary wire. In fact, Marching Home appeared to read Milton's mind for she was bounding out of the gate as if she were shot from a cannon. The Shandon Farm's Lemont did a lot of chasing, which accounted for second money, two and a half lengths behind the winner. Stocks, medium of some heavy play, was third in the field of seven.

Marching Home's victory was anticipated and she was a 1-5 betting proposition at one stage, finally paying a $3.10 mutuel and was the first favorite of the day to succeed. She was clocked in 1:12 3-5 for the 6 furlongs. Jockey Nick Wall rode the winner.

The program was conducted over a fast track despite the early morning showers. The second day of the meeting saw a crowd of 8,000 in the stands.

More Trouble, owned by Mrs. John Bosley, jr., defeated a cheap field of platers competing at one and one-sixteenth miles in the first race. The Canter gelding downed Sandy Belle by a half-length, with Flower Time a well-beaten third. More Trouble paid a $13 mutuel.

Mrs. M. MacNeille's Shogun scored an easy victory in the day's steeplechase event, leading Red Shank to the finish line by seven lengths while nicely in hand. Third money went to Good Chance. Shogun moved up with a rush the second time around and, after Top Wave made a bad landing at twelfth fence, had things his own way. Shogun was well handled by Mr. C. R. White and paid a $10.60 mutuel.

Evening Tide, with Jockey Kurtsinger up, led most of the way to take the third race at a $9.80 mutuel.

This was Trainer Michel's twenty-fourth winner of the Maryland season. Second money went to H. W. Jackson's Clamorous with Veiled Lady, a long shot, third, in the field of a dozen.

The Booker family put Manual across in the fourth race to the tune of a $32.10 mutuel. The Dress Parade gelding was never headed in the mile-and-a-sixteenth contest. Sleek, a paddock tip, was second and The Mauler was third in the field of ten.

Rough Time, owned by J. Yancey Christmas, of Upper Marlboro, Md., won the Monocacy Purse, listed as the sixth race. Rough Time broke in front and stayed there throughout, leading Zostera, the favorite, to the wire by 2½ lengths. Wam was third, three lengths further back. The winner paid a $9 mutuel.

Little Argo, running in the colors of Mrs. W. H. Denham, of Washington, took the seventh race, paying a $37.80 mutuel. Apprentice Jockey R. Morris rode the winner, which went out to a long lead leaving the backstretch and held safe Ashen and Inferno Lad, two that had trouble.

SOUTH BEND, allowed to race on own courage to the backstretch, gained sharply when placed to drive, came through on the rail at the final bend and barely lasted under pressure. WARD-IN-CHANCERY, steadied along close to the leaders to the stretch, responded to punishment and was wearing down the winner to the end. CHIMNEY TOP was rushed to the front at once, opened a long lead and then tired gradually from hustling tactics. MASTER LAD stopped in the stretch. The others were outrun.

Miller Predicts Formidable Terp Ring Team as 47 Start Work

Roster of 60 Is Expected This Week

Squad Lists Conference Champ; Regulars Yet to Begin Work.

If there is anything to that gag about strength in numbers, the Southern Conference boxing championship already is headed for College Park and the protecting wings of Maryland's leather pushers. At least that's the impression you get trying to squeeze into the Terrapin ringmen's sweaty little quarters in Ritchie Coliseum. The place is cluttered up with muscular, trim-looking youngsters swinging at one another.

A short, chubby gent, with a keen, discerning eye and a quiet, confident air, ushered the boys through their paces, taking them aside in pairs for personal instruction in the fine art of bopping one another. He is Maj. Harvey L. ("Heine") Miller, secretary of the District Boxing Commission, Maryland's new coach, and an old gladiator in his own right.

"Yes, there are plenty of them out here," he said, waving a roundhouse right in the direction of the candidates, "but some will tire of the soprt and quit; then I'll have to weed out those who can't make the grade, or aren't cut out for it. So, we won't have so many after a few weeks. But when we get through cutting down we'll have a team that will not have to step aside for any of them."

Forty-seven men, including freshmen, are trying out for the frosh and varsity squads, with Lyman McAboy, Miller's assistant, handling the newcomers for the time being. But the majority of last season's regular team has yet to report, and when they do the roster will be weighted down with about 60 names.

Ivan Nedomatsky, Conference 145-champion; Ed Shegogue, regular 115-pounder; Tom Birmingham, 125; Johnny Gormley and Blair Smith, 175; "Turk" Birkland and Ed Fletcher, heavyweights, are among this group. All, with exception of those playing football, are expected to begin training this week.

Duckpin Marks Fall in League Contests

Some mighty maple mauling, characteristic of the Ladies' District League, the city's strongest feminine loop, featured the league's activities last night. Lorraine Gulli, displaying the form which for years marked her as the greatest woman bowler of all time, set a season record game of 161 and a 387 set, to give her Lucky Strike team three victories over Georgetown. Catherine Quigley, a teammate, followed close behind with 378.

Highway Engineers, led by Pauline Ford's 135 game and 347 set, maintained a clean slate against Swanee, chalking up top set of the night with a total pinfall of 1,637. The R. E. A. Cleaners, the league's newest entry, turned in the night's surprise effort by trouncing Convention Hall. Louise Roberts, carrying a 98 average, featured the upset with a 130 game and 373 set.

The champion Rosslyn girls, after a hard struggle, managed to shut out the Arcade five. The second game was decided by a roll-off, the leaders winning by one pin when Lucy Rose counted seven on a mark.

Arcade Sunshine dominated the Columbia Heights League at Arcadia, winding up its clean-sweep over Eagle Bedding Co. with three new season marks. Pinky Brodt rolled a 157 game, Irwin Simon a 412 set and the team pounding out a total pinfall of 1,796. Hessick Coal annexed high team honors with a 614 game.

After 12 straight victories the pace-setting Cools Fountain team bowed twice to Arcadia.

Gotthardt's 124 game and 358 set topped the scoring in the Bankers League . . . The first-place Mizpah team's 497 game and Jos. H. Milan's 1,449 set featured in the Eastern Star League . . . Commerce continued to hold sway in the Lucky Strike Ladies League by blanking H. O. L. C., No. 1 . . . Although bowing twice to Accounts & Collection's 1,378 total, Technical Staff held first place in the Commercial and Miscellaneous Tax League.

An intercity match between Bo Bregman's Grill, of Washington, and the Baltimore Recreation five has been scheduled for Saturday night at the local Recreation alleys.

In the Grillmen's line-up are Capt. Joe Harrison, Ed Blakeney, Howard Parsons, Henry May, Johnny Anderson and Joe Freschi. They will be opposed by Meyer Jacobson, recent victor in a 20-game match against Astor Clarke, Harry Schreck, Andy Zeiler, Doc Pickus and Dawson Snyder.

The local team will go to Baltimore for a return match the following night.

Washington Pros Have Skull Session

Last night's heavy rain interrupted the Washington Pros' practice at Duffy Stadium, Seat Pleasant, but Coach Gene Augusterfer took the squad indoors and continued with a skull session.

Plays to be used Sunday against Norfolk were outlined and ways and means of stopping Andy Zeher and his vaunted passing attack also came before the meeting. Stopping Zeher, a former Quantico Marine star, is paramount if the Pros hope to take this game, for it was his ball-carrying and passes that accounted for Norfolk's 21 points against Baltimore last week.

No changes are anticipated in the starting lineup, and, as against Richmond last Sunday Pepco Barry will occupy the featured role on offense.

3 Injuries Hurt Card Chances Saturday

Katalinas, 2 Others to Be Out of West Virginia Wesleyan Game.

Catholic University's hopes of redeeming itself by a convincing victory over West Virginia Wesleyan Saturday were dimmed considerably when three Cardinals, including a regular tackle, were carted off the practice field to the infirmary after a grueling scrimmage with the freshmen yesterday.

Big Leo Katalinas, a tackle, was the most important casualty. The others were Ed Dunne, reserve end, who was supposed to replace Zeke Brown in the starting line-up, and Frank Krawczell, sophomore halfback. It is doubtful if any of them will be ready for duty against Wesleyan.

Wesleyan will arrive in Washington tomorrow night at 11 o'clock and will make the Lafayette Hotel its headquarters.

Terps Take It Easy.

Maryland took things easy yesterday, merely running through signals and working on plays to be used against Richmond. Bill Guckeyson and "Jumbo Jim" Meade will be back in uniform today and Dobson will try to determine whether the pair will be available this Saturday. The prevailing opinion, however, is that neither will play.

Some doubt still remains whether Jack Fleming, Georgetown's ace punter, and Joe Keegin, reserve halfback, will make the trip to Morgantown, where the Hoyas face West Virginia Saturday. Fleming's chances of going, barring another last minute mishap, are good, but Keegin's are extremely doubtful.

Clem Stralka and Pat Brady, injured tackles, reported back yesterday and seem ready to resume their place in the line-up. Hagerty is planning several changes in the line-up, but will defer any announcements until tomorrow.

Georgetown leaves tonight at midnight, but will not go directly to Morgantown. The squad will be quartered at Fairmont, W. Va., 25 miles from the scene of battle. It will work out on the Mountaineers' field tomorrow and not return again until just before game time.

Coach Orrel Mitchell put Gallaudet's squad through a long scrimmage with Maryland's freshmen yesterday at College Park, as the Blues continued preparations for Saturday's game at New York with C. C. N. Y. Olaf Tollefson is the only man on the injured list and the squad is in good spirits and confident of taking City College into camp.

Little Hoyas Meet Gonzaga Today

Georgetown Prep and Gonzaga will tangle in an old rivalry at Garrett Park this afternoon. The opening whistle is scheduled to toot at 3:15.

The Georgetown lads will be seeking revenge for a 51-to-0 defeat handed them by Gonzaga last year, but will be handicapped by the absences from the line-up of their regular quarterback, Bob O'Shaughnessy.

O'Shaughnessy is out for the season because of an injured knee. Signals will be called by John Heimbaugh, a substitute halfback before his promotion.

Addison Hagan, who has played in—and starred in—three games this season, will occupy the right halfback position. At left halfback will be Vincent Morris, a 135-pound substitute, who has earned his berth on the varsity by hard work.

Diffenbaugh Gets Par Smashing 66

Playing in top form, George Diffenbaugh, Indian Spring Country Club professional, visited Washington Golf and Country Club yesterday and left the imprint of a smashing 66 on the hilly Virginia course.

Diffenbaugh cracked par by four strokes, while playing with Bob Pettingell against Professional Dave Thomas and Art Dunlop. The Indian Spring pro turned in 34, hit the back nine in 32, and racked up six birdies.

On the 330-yard seventeenth Diffenbaugh reached the green in one blow and got down for his birdie 3. Thomas scored a 72, and he and his partner lost to Diffenbaugh and Pettingell, 3 and 2.

Kiwanis Club to Get Golf Trophies Today

Trophies and prizes won during the past season in golf matches with Rotary will be received officially this afternoon at 1 o'clock by President Bynum E. Hinton at a meeting of the Kiwanis Club at the Mayflower Hotel.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Stop the presses! Hold everything! That football game between George Washington U. and Rice last Saturday at Houston was a 6-to-6 tie, not a 12-to-6 victory for Rice as reported in the Sunday morning papers.

That 12-to-6 victory credited to Rice is pure newspaper talk. At least, that's what we gather from the showing of the "official" pictures of the game presented on the screen at the G. W. U. gymnasium last night before a gathering of Colonial players, coaches and newspapermen.

POVICH.

Nary a trace of a third touchdown was evident in the screening of the pictures of the battle, obtained at a great cost by the George Washington Athletic Department. On the cutting-room floor lies the evidence that Rice did, indeed, win the ball game.

Through four full periods the Colonials and Owls apparently battled on the screen, yet, at the final whistle, there was no proof last night that Rice had won. Plainly the pictures showed Rice's second touchdown on a 30-yard run by Red Vickers, and George Washington's touchdown pass from Joey Kaufman to Pete Yurwitz, but Rice's first touchdown, scored on a pass to Neece across the goal line, was entirely ignored by the film.

Maybe it was considered unimportant, or, perhaps, unworthy of portrayal. It was, in fact, a dastardly trick by Rice which scored the touchdown. Vickers faking a run before he heaved the pass to Neece. Here's a thought: maybe the Legion of Decency threw the play out of the film.

The screening of the game was, however, a source of satisfaction to the football writers from Washington who were on the scene of the battle. The glowing reports they dispatched to the Capital from the press box anent Red Vickers' touchdown gallop of 30 yards were justified by the slow-motion pictures of the run.

Always prone to magnify such feats, the press box in this instance was proved eminently correct despite the superlatives employed to describe the decisive dash by the red-headed Rice ace. Plainly did the pictures show Vickers, with the big 33 on his back, making a touchdown from 30 yards out with a lightning-shaft gallop that was almost incredible.

Four George Washington players actually had their hands on Vickers at some point during his run. A fifth barely missed him. Renzaglia, Rebholtz, Jenkins and Holt all failed to hang onto Vickers as he twisted, squirmed, danced and minced through a broken field to cross the goal line standing up.

On the previous play, Vickers had been thrown for a 7-yard loss on a forward-passing attempt, but George Washington was still wary of his passing prowess. Because he was a triple threat, he was able to open up the G. W. defense for his touchdown dash. The back who is not adept at passing, conversely, is under a terrific handicap when he runs the ball.

And tales of Joey Kaufman's prowess at Houston were not overdrawn, either, despite the multiple adjectives with which reporters at the scene found themselves describing the performance of the slender G. W. U. halfback.

Kaufman was the spark of every George Washington advance, running, passing and kicking. Despite the fact he absorbed a terrific physical pounding from big Rice linemen, who rushed him continually on the spread formation that provides no protection for the man taking the ball, Kaufman returned to the battle on each occasion a veritable fire-brand.

He it was who directed the 80-yard touchdown advance of the Colonials. On the screen his feats were easily visible. In seven of the eight plays required by G. W. U. to reach the goal line, Kaufman was the central figure, heaving passes for the most part, but inserting also a 17-yard run to the 10-yard line that actually set up the touchdown. It was his pass to Yurwitz over the line that climaxed the drive.

A junior at George Washington this season, Kaufman is destined to step into revered football company before his playing days are done. On performances, at this writing, he ranks as the outstanding back of Washington colleges. By next season he may have no serious rivals for the recognition as the best back hereabouts since Leemans.

Sports Writers to Vie For Golf Trophy Today

Washington's army of sports writers will make its annual invasion of the Army War College's cute little nine-hole course next Monday, November 9, to compete in the Cleland Cup golf tournament—only tournament of its kind in the United States.

Capt. Robb S. Mackie, of the Army War College, will be in charge of the tournament, which will start around 9:30. Around 55, including the defending champion, Maurice Fitzgerald, are eligible for the big championship.

Heurich Court Team Starts Practice Tonight

Bolstered by the addition of Gay Edelin, "Reds" Scheible and Charley Buchholtz, former Eastern High School stars, the Heurich Senate quintet will begin practice tonight at 7 o'clock on its home floor. Clin Price, manager of the team, has arranged a scrimmage with the pros.

In addition to the trio named, Fred and Lou Scheele, "Huck" Cavanaugh and Earl Groves will be with the team, which will compete in the Heurich and Community Center Leagues.

Olin Acclaimed Heavyweight King of City

Everett Seeks Re-Match With His Conqueror; Other Ring Notes.

Bob Olin, former light-heavyweight champion of the world, was officially recognized yesterday as heavyweight champion of the District, as frantic efforts were under way to rematch him with Buck Everett, whom he knocked out last Monday night.

Everett, because he had beaten practically every heavyweight hereabouts prior to his defeat by Olin, is recognized as No. 1 challenger for the local crown.

Because his fighter was leading on points before the one damaging punch which closed Everett's eye in the third round and forced him to resign in the fourth, Buck's manager, Jimmy Erwin, is seeking the rematch.

Before the bout can be made, both parties must come to an agreement on terms with Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn. Olin wants a flat guarantee of $1,000, a sum not deemed unreasonable by those in the game. Ahearn insists that Everett will have to work for a smaller percentage than usual if the return bout is to be possible.

Erwin wants the fight for November 16, but Olin is booked on that date in New York and will not be available until one week later.

The commission also has voted to recognize California Joe Rivers as No. 1 contender for the District lightweight title, now held by Howard Scott. Rivers recently defeated Howard here, but since the bout was not scheduled for 15 rounds and was not won by a knockout, the championship did not change hands.

The boxing commission will sponsor the junior championship tournament to be held in conjunction with the A. A. U. senior tournament to be held next February. Medals will be donated by the commission.

Olson Is Listed To Beat Dusek Tonight

Cliff Olson, the man who apparently has a lifetime job in the feature spot of the weekly wrestling show, once again will hold forth tonight at Turner's Arena. This time he will be assisted by "Rowdy Rudy" Dusek, roistering rascal of the rassle racket.

The little drama this evening concerns a promising juvenile (Olson), the season's biggest build-up, and hardened veteran, who has gained the heights in unpopularity.

The story to be portrayed allegorically is the one about Youth going forth, barehanded, to clash with a harsh, cruel, adverse existence, which rises like some overpowering ogre. The struggle will be long and terrible. But in the fadeout the sweating hand of Youth will be raised in triumph. Very touching stuff.

Featuring the preliminary acts, Dashing Jack Donovan, the reason ladies attend rassle shows, will try out his brand-new super de luxe Irish flip on Stolid Stan Sokolis, whoever he is. Also, Jawn Katan entertains Matros Kirilenko. Eli Fisher engages George McLeod, and Jack Hader works with Nick Campofreda.

Press Agents Tangle in Tangle To Untangle D. C. Grid Ratings

By Lewis F. Atchison.

If the football teams of Catholic University and George Washintgon display as much skill, sagacity and fight on the football field Saturday as their respective publicity agents have shown this week in newspaper offices, it's going to be a mighty sad afternoon for the opposition.

They were off to a rather slow start, each trying to figure out the other's style while looking for a vulnerable spot in the armor. But the second round was at a fast and furious clip, with honors about evenly divided and the sports writers a trifle groggy. The finish, we are happy to report, promises to be one of the most whirlwindish that ever climaxed a similar bout.

Chick Kenny, Catholic's 185-pounder, took the offense with a weighty stack of documents tending to prove West Virginia Wesleyan's prowess. He scored with a memo that its coach, C. B. Ross, is noted for upsetting more highly regarded opponents, numbering among his victims over a period of years, Southern Methodist, Kentucky, Georgetown, Syracuse and New York University. Even last year his boys had Catholic 5-6 until the last 5 minutes of a hectic game.

And Duquesne, Too.

He followed up with a vicious pass at a 48-point banner with the information that the team still has Len Barnum, a skull-cracking fullback whom the Cardinals last year selected as the best fullback they encountered all season. Barnum is the best passer Catholic will meet up with this season, according to Kenny, and will show the fans a major league brand of heaving. He urges all who can possibly do so to get out and have a look at this lad.

But Kenny saved his best punch for last, throwing both fists at his typewriter in announcing that Wesleyan, in nosing out Dquesne, 2-0, defeated the team that knocked off Rice, 14-0, and Pittsburgh, 6-0. Apparently conclusive evidence in favor of a victory for the Brookland Blaster.

But hold on, 105-pound Jack Espey, George Washington's one-punch kayo artist, was still in the fight, hoping to land one telling punch.

He countered weakly with a statement that Davis-Elkins held Geneva to a scoreless tie when it figured to lose by a truckload of touchdowns. Geneva later held Wesleyan to a 7-6 margin, Kenny took this without blinking.

Espey tossed caution to the wind, bringing up Davis-Elkins' weight chart, supposedly more impressive than George Washington's, and the classroom dope, which reveals that the visitors use freshmen along with the rest of 'em. Kenny also took this without batting an eyelash.

In desperation Espey brought one up from the floor. Why all this talk about who-struck-John and how hard? Hadn't George Washington tied Mississippi and didn't Mississippi wallop Catholic, 14-0?

Bong! Both boys were pawing feebly at the bell.

Devitt Team to Leave For Tilt With Staunton

Devitt Prep's football team will embark tomorrow morning via bus for the Valley of Virginia to engage Staunton Military Academy, once a power in Old Dominion prep football.

The team will be the guests tomorrow night at the academy. Next week Devitt meets its arch rival, Bullis Prep, which recently defeated Massanutten, which in turn won from Staunton, 22 to 6.

Foe for Fredericksburg.

The Fredericksburg Athletic Club Big Reds have an open date on November 11, Armistice Day, and would like to book a strong Washington or Virginia 150-pound or unlimited eleven for a game at Fredericksburg. Interested teams should write or phone Roy V. Butler, Fredericksburg, Va.

MEN PAST 40
Many men at 40, in perfect health, without an ache or pain, wonder why they aren't as strong and as vigorous as they were 5 or 10 years ago. Mental and physical fatigue is the cause in the majority of cases. Fortunately this condition can be helped by the use of a recently discovered hormone. This hormone stimulates the glandular system to greater activity—helps build up lowered vitality.
This hormone is now available, together with other valuable ingredients in Zo-ak Tablets (Blue Box for men—Orange Box for women) and are sold and recommended by Unity Drug Stores and chain stores. Zo-ak is the formula of a distinguished American physician who has written a booklet called "For Men Who Want to Live," a copy of which will be sent in a plain sealed envelope by Zo-ak Co., 56 W. 45th St., N. Y.

Commodities Sweep Upward In Buying Wave

Cotton, Copper, Rubber, Grains, Lead, Sugar Join Advance.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 4.—Commodity prices were sharply higher today in one of the broadest buying movements of the year. World markets for copper, rubber, cotton and other important staples felt a surge of demand as traders sought to interpret the Democratic victory at the polls yesterday.

Cotton, this country's major export item, jumped $1 to about $1.25 a bale at one time.

A previous advance in copper for export was sharply accelerated. With heavy foreign demand attributed mainly to armament and industrial recovery needs, the export price spurted to nearly 10¾ cents a pound, a gain of about one-third of a cent.

Lead joined the rise. Leading producers marked the prices up $2 a ton. A rise in tin in London was stretched to about $40 a ton since Monday.

Grains Advance.

After lagging early, grains felt the pull of other staples. Wheat futures in Chicago pushed up as much as a cent a bushel at one time and lesser grains followed with smaller advances. At Winnipeg prices were up 2 cents or more.

Rubber futures resumed a climb to new tops for the recovery, trading well above 17 cents a pound on a gain of about one-quarter of a cent. Sugar, cocoa and hides also participated in the advance.

The re-election of President Roosevelt and the belief that the sugar program would be continued led to active general buying in the sugar futures market today. A sharp advance in prices carried some of the late positions into new high ground for the season. November from 2.52 to 2.60 and September from 2.59 to 2.66 or 12 to 19 points net higher.

North Western Rail Order.

Chicago & North Western Railroad Co. has placed orders for 48,000 tons of Rails. Of this 12,500 tons were awarded to Inland Steel Co. 28,750 to Carnegie Steel Co. and 7,500 to Bethlehem Steel Co. The railroad also ordered 14,000 tons of fittings.

March rallied from 11.77 to 11.89 and closed at 11.82, with prices generally ending 17 to 28 points net higher.

Opening advances of 10 to 30 points in response to firm cables and the Roosevelt victory brought in heavy general buying from foreign and domestic sources.

Chicago, Nov. 4.—Stimulated chiefly by enlarged export demand in Canada and by crop damage advices from Argentina, the Chicago wheat market today advanced 1⅝ cents maximum.

Upturns of securities and some revival of inflation talk counted, too, as bullish factors regarding wheat. Estimates were current that as much as 2,000,000 bushels of wheat had been bought for export from Canada.

Wheat in Chicago closed firm, ⅛ to 1 cent above Monday's finish, December, 114⅝@114¾; May, 113@113⅛; July 99⅝@99¾; corn unchanged to ¾ higher; December, 95⅜@95½; May new, 90¾; July new, 87⅜; oats ⅜ to ⅞ up, December, 41⅞, and rye at ½ to 1 cent bulge, December, 83¾. Provisions results showed 5 to 20 cents advance.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Election Gives Stocks Inflationary Fillip and Prices Jump in Heavy Trading.

New York, Nov. 4.—Speculative markets began with caution, after taking their cue from the London trading, but as soon as it was found that no large stock selling orders were on the books the professional trading element hurried to work and before noon the ticker was badly out of line with actual trading. Prices rose rapidly on the increasing volume and the market did not slacken much until afternoon. Closing prices were at the best with sales around 3,250,000 shares, the first time that mark has been topped since February 20. The ticker again ran several minutes late at the close as buying spread to all classes of traders.

Assumption that the New Deal success meant continued high spending, with a good chance of currency inflation later, also helped commodity markets, but bonds, nevertheless, strengthened. That circumstance was seized upon by a section of opinion to indicate that the election had removed an element of uncertainty and would be followed by further business recovery, and, perhaps, by sounder Government finance and economic procedure. December wheat closed ¾ of a cent higher, at 114¾ cents a bushel.

While all along a large section of Wall Street opinion had been that, much as a Republican victory was desired, the chances favored President Roosevelt's re-election, the sweeping nature of the outcome was a surprise. In one direction it served to increase the gloom, and in another lightened it. No one wasted much time in trying to figure out how a different campaign strategy, or even a different candidate, might have changed the election. The adverse vote was too heavy to permit of argument.

Anxiety Remains.

In some quarters the result was taken philosophically and the remark that the end of the world hasn't yet come was frequently heard. In others the atmosphere was fairly blue, for President Roosevelt's parting shot of the campaign created more genuine anxiety than anything said or done in a long time. His invitations to his critics to emgirate, had his assurance that he had made a mere beginning on New Deal policies, and his promise to business men that he would show them he was their master alarmed even those who were inclined to favor the Administration.

On the gloomy side the tendency was to expect that the worst was yet to come in the way of business and market regulation, Government deficits and fiscal experimentation. No one looked for any improvement, but many feared a gradual tightening of the screws. Many accepted as a fact that a permanent political change is taking place; that the New Deal is not an emergency application, but a long term plan to weaken the position of property. Certainly the hoped for curb of conservative gains in Congress will be lacking. As one Wall Street man tersely put it: the election was a victory for 40,000,000 who don't pay income taxes over 5,000,000 who do.

Inflation Prospect.

In spite of the willingness of speculative markets to predict more inflation, Wall Street in some sections presumed that business men would not change their policies much until they could determine which way the cat is likely to jump. Business no doubt is inclined to give the Government that "co-operation" which it talks about so much, but may not care for the "guided business' idea with which a Cabinet member couples it. Before any large scale expansion of business can be expected, the Government must give some definite indication of how it intends to proceed, both on the score of business management and on that of fiscal policy.

If a swing further in the direction of inflation takes place, it would be logical to expect corporations to accumulate inventories, and for prices to begin to rise sharply. Otherwise, the only element likely to change the present trend of slow business recovery is the outbreak of more labor difficulties. The demands of labor and the prospect for higher raw material costs are unknown quantities that give uncertainty to business earnings over the next several months.

Commodity Stocks Favored.

That inflation was a factor in the uprising in stocks was suggested by the strength in those groups usually favored by such considerations—the metals and mining, automotive, oil, sugar and other commodity groups. By contrast the public utility stocks were heavy in spots, and the railroad shares were rather neglected. Quite apart from the menace to certain public utility systems contained in the Government's plan to compete with private enterprise and to break up the holding organizations, utility and railroad companies, with rigid selling prices, but with highly flexible wage and material costs, are not favorite vehicles for speculative rides along the inflationary trail.

Gains in the favored group amounted to 1 to 4 points, and the large increases were numerous. Chrysler, with an extra dividend and possibly a stock split approaching, was given a hard shove forward to a new high price. U. S. Steel climbed more than 2 points. Standard Oil spurted. Anaconda and Kennecott reached new high prices. General Electric sold at a new high. International Nickel, with a higher dividend voted Monday, soared in this market and in London.

Silver stocks were the most buoyant of the commodity group, but chemicals were close. Steel issues were heavily favored and the railroad equipments and store issues found ready buyers anxious to take part in what they fancied would be a renewal of the bull market after the fashion of the 1933 affair. The Sun's compilation of average prices for industrial stocks reached the highest level in more than five years.

Farm implement shares bounded forward with the best of them. Scattered favorites included Steel Foundries, Allis-Chalmers, Standard Oil of Indiana, Allied Chemical, Loew's, Electric Auto Lite, United States Rubber, May Department and Best & Co.

Standard Oil Of California Votes 5c Extra

Bristol Myers Increases Rate and Declares 20 Cents Extra.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 4.—The flow of extra increased and special dividends continued today, with announcement by several large corporations of plans for awarding shareholders final 1936 payments in cash or securities.

Directors of Standard Oil Co. of California, today declared an extra dividend of 5 cents a share on the capital stock, and the regular quarterly dividend of 25 cents, payable December 15 to stockholders of record November 16. Similar extra payments of 5 cents in addition to the regular dividend were made in the three preceding quarters.

The company reported for the third quarter net profits of $7,683,528 before undistributed profits surtax, equal to 59 cents a share of capital stock. This compares with $6,026,588, or 46 cents a share in the previous quarter and $5,175,859, or 29 cents a share in the third quarter of 1935.

Bristol Myers.

Bristol Myers Co., manufacturer of drug and pharmaceutical specialties, declared an extra dividend of 20 cents and a quarterly dividend of 60 cents on capital stock, both payable December 1 to stock of record November 13. The previous rate was 50 cents quarterly with 10 cents extra in the last three quarters.

Reynolds Metals.

Reynolds Metals Co., manufacturer of metal foils, disclosed that it would create an issue of not exceeding $1,000,000 of 3½ per cent debentures to be used for payment to common stockholders.

The company said the proposed issue was "the only practical way" of permitting it to retain 1936 excess earnings, which would otherwise be subject to the Federal undistributed profits surtax and involve payment to the Government of about $110,000.

Dictaphone Increase.

Dictaphone Corporation, of New York, with a plant at Bridgeport, Conn., ordered a dividend of $2.25 on the common stock, compared with $1 paid on June 1 and September 1 of this year. It is payable December 1 to stock of record November 13.

Consolidated Paper Extra.

Consolidated Paper Co., of Detroit, announced an extra dividend of $1 on capital stock and a regular quarterly distribution of 25 cents, both payable December 1 to stock of record November 20.

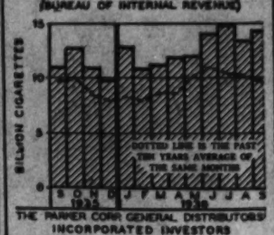
Cigarette Output Sets High Record



Boston, Mass., Nov. 4.—Cigarette production continues to chalk up records. More cigarettes were produced last September than in any September on record, while production passed a year ago by 32 per cent. The first nine months' production passed the same 1935 months by 13½ per cent. Furthermore, there is a decided gain in the output of cigars.

Curb Industrials Lead Brisk Rise

New York, Nov. 4 (AP).—The curb market today permitted the big board to define its response to the election. In so doing it followed the stock exchange advance in industrials and the slump in utilities. Trading volume rose to the highest since last March at 777,000 shares compared with 486,000 on Monday.

Gulf Oil closed at 106½, up 4; Casco Products 35¾, up 5¾; Hudson Bay Mining & Smelting 31⅝, up 2⅝; Newmont 105½, up 6½; Sunshine Mining 19⅜, up 2⅛; Pepperell Manufacturing 117, up 5. American Gas & Electric was forced down 3⅜, closing at 38¾. Other leading utilities showed losses ranging from fractions to 2½.

Steel Industry Expects New Forward Move

Pig Iron Output Larger and Scrap Steel Prices Higher.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Nov. 4.—Six possible indicators that pre-election uncertainty in the steel industry may soon be displaced by a renewed forward movement were cited today in the weekly summary of Iron Age. These pointers were:

A slight lifting of the rate of steel ingot production to 74½ per cent of capacity.

An October increase of 6 per cent in pig-iron production.

A stronger scrap metal market with an advance of 25 cents a ton in heavy melting steel at Chicago.

A stepping up of automobile assemblies to more than 71,000 a week with further gains in immediate prospect.

An advance of $1 a ton in pig-iron prices by an Eastern producer which may be followed shortly by competitors.

More active buying of a number of steel products.

"Steel production has gained moderately at Pittsburgh and Chicago," the review said. "Several of the larger companies are operating at fractionally higher rates than last week. The tapering of new business, principally in the heavier products, which had affected schedules at some mills apparently has been checked. Moreover, this loss of tonnage has been offset to a considerable extent by larger releases of bars, sheets, strip and wire by the automobile makers.

"The shortage of pig iron in Europe has restricted exports to this country and Atlantic Coast consumers will be more dependent on domestic supplies, which are none too plentiful. In England trading in pig iron has virtually been suspended because of scarcity."

Hearn Store Stock Issues Offered Today

Convertible 6% Preferred Priced at $52 and Common at $15.50.

A new issue of 45,000 shares of 6 per cent cumulative convertible preferred stock, par value $50, of Hearn Department Stores, Inc, of New York, is being offered today by Robert Garratt & Sons, of Baltimore, and the First New Amsterdam Corporation, of New York. The stock, which is issued in exchange for 20,000 preferred now outstanding, is priced at $52 per share.

A block of 40,000 shares, part of a registered issue of 500,000 shares of Hearn common stock, par value $5, also is being offered today by the First New Amsterdam Corporation at $15.50 per share. A total of 135,000 shares is reserved for conversion of the new preferred.

The preferred stock is convertible into common stock at the rate of three shares for each $50 par value of preferred stock on or before October 1, 1937, and thereafter at the rate of two and one-half shares of common stock for each $50 par value of preferred stock on or before December 31, 1941, with no conversion rights thereafter. Dividends at the rate of 6 per cent per annum are cumulative for from November 1, 1936. The preferred stock is redeemable on any dividend payment date at 110 per cent of the par value plus dividends.

Proceeds from the sale of common stock will be used as a working capital for purchase of merchandise at peak seasons in the ordinary course of business. Since the preferred stock is being sold by the holders, the company will not receive any proceeds.

THE SAFEST INVESTMENT IN THE WORLD

A good investment is worth a lifetime of labor—a good farm located at the National Capital is the safest investment in the world. The Lohr Farm is a perfect farm, not because of the outstanding production attained with 44 bushels of wheat to the acre, 80 bushels of oats and 19 tons ensilage, not because of the net income of more than $3,000 a year, but because it is perfectly fenced, with 18 fields and paddocks, with streams and springs, with ample barns and a James-way Dairy, three tenant houses and a ten room residence, with water, lights, etc. A perfect farm because there are no weeds, rocks, stumps or nuisances—where every inch is rich and useful.

A well known Washington real estate man says: "The Lohr Farm has more potential value than any farm I have seen near Washington." This farm is located 12 miles from Washington on the Chain Bridge Road near Vienna, Virginia. The farm, cattle, horses, feed and equipment will be sold to settle the estate of Arthur B. Lohr, deceased, at

King Reviews Blind 18 Years After War

Rome, Nov. 4 (AP).—Seven days before the rest of the world, Italy today celebrated its own World War Armistice Day. As head of the Italian Army, King Victor Emmanuel III observed the 18th Anniversary of victory over Austria-Hungary by reviewing 3,000 blind and permanently crippled veterans of the war, each escorted by a young Fascist. Italy signed a separate Armistice with Austria and Hungary a week before the Allies and Germany negotiated an Armistice.

Premier Benito Mussolini kept discreetly in the background, allowing the Italian public unhampered opportunity to express homage to the King.

Phillips Credentials Read to Italian King

Rome, Nov. 4 (AP).—United States Ambassador William Phillips presented his credentials today to King Victor Emmanuel of Italy. The officials documents addressed the Italian ruler only as the "King of Italy" and did not refer to him as "Emperor of Ethiopia."

Phillips read his address of presentation to the King in the Quirinal Palace. The Monarch replied in English, assuring the Ambassador of co-operation between his government and the United States.

'Stand Behind The President,' Says Al Smith

Coughlin Avers Roosevelt Has More Power Than Any Man in World.

By the Associated Press.

A rush of comment upon President Roosevelt's reelection yesterday ranged from calls for a united front for the best interests of the party to requests for a vigorous minority and on to caustic statements upon the outcome.

Following Gov. Alf M. Landon's assertion that all would work for "the common cause" of the country, and the statement of his running mate, Col. Frank Knox, that the people had "indicated their will," these comments among others were forthcoming:

Alfred E. Smith, 1928 Democratic Presidential nominee, who supported Landon:

"Every citizen, every real American, must put his shoulder to the wheel and stand behind the President."

Four Years of Effort.

James A. Farley, Democratic national chairman, "We may now look forward to four years of uninterrupted effort to accomplish the completion of economic recovery * * *"

John D. M. Hamilton, Republican national chairman: "Under our form of government a militant and vigilant minority has a vital service to render to the Nation."

Secretary Roper: "Business * * * should be encouraged by the fact that it is through wise adjustment and balancing among the segments of our economic and social life * * * that equitable and safe business relations are perpetuated."

Senator Gore (Democrat), Oklahoma, defeated in last summer's primaries: "Conservatism, without the conflict of an opposing progressivism, will stagnate; progressivism, unimpeded by conservatism, will achieve a runaway speed."

Greater Victory.

Vice President Garner: "The victory was even greater than I expected."

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor: "I am pleased over the outcome. Evidently labor stood solid and immovable behind the President."

Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate: "Never was our Socialist message more necessary than now."

Secretary of State Hull: "I am immensely pleased with the outcome which I had confidently expected."

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace: "The great majority of farmers have indicated that they have a real understanding of the problems of agriculture and the direction in which they must solve them."

Father Charles E. Coughlin: "President Roosevelt can be a dictator if he wants to. President Roosevelt has more power than any man ever had in the world. In the future, historians will devote less time to Caesar and Napoleon and more to Franklin Roosevelt."

Vote of Confidence.

Senator Robert M. LaFollette, jr. (Progressive), of Wisconsin: "The vote for President Roosevelt was a great vote of confidence for him personally and a victory for the progressive principles which he upheld."

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan: "The greatest campaigner of modern times has capitalized on an irresistible personality and an irresistible appeal."

Frederick J. Libby, executive secretary of the National Council for the Prevention of War:

"The demand of the American people for peace was one strong factor in giving President Roosevelt and the Democratic Party their overwhelming victory. The campaign was fought mainly on the domestic issue of the New Deal, but President Roosevelt early took pains, as Gov. Landon did not, to appeal to the peace sentiment of the country."

Lone Quadruplet Given Life Chance

Memphis, Tenn., Nov. 4 (AP).—The one surviving baby of quadruplets born to a Missouri sharecropper's wife took a few drops of nourishment today and received a physician's verdict of an even chance to live.

Tipping the scales at a bare 2 pounds, Lee Earl Bridges slept quietly in her incubator refreshed after a light feeding of mother's milk, glucose and water.

A sister, Ella Pearl Bridges, died early today 36 hours after their birth in the cypress swamp cabin of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Bridges, near Senath, Mo.

They were brought here by ambulance after the death of their brother and sister shortly after the quadruple birth.

Alexandrian Kills Self by Gas Fumes

Shutting all windows and doors in the kitchen and turning on all gas jets in the stove, Richard B. Peyton, 48, a plumber, took his life yesterday at 415 North St. Asaph street in Alexandria, Va.

Police, summoned by neighbors, broke into the kitchen on the second floor of the house and found Peyton lying on the floor. He had been dead more than 12 hours, police said.

Spanish Troops Detain U. S. Oil Firm Head

Barcelona, Spain, Nov. 4 (AP).—John Howard Jordain, of Atlanta, Ga., commercial director for Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. in Spain, was detained last night by the government militia for possession of what officers suspected to be a "monarchist banner."

The "banner," a strip of red and yellow (monarchist colors) ribbon, which Jordain said had served as a table decoration at a dinner party seven years ago, was unearthed when the militiamen searched his home.

Jordain was released as soon as Catalonian authorities heard of the arrest. Officials said the detention was without basis.

Catholic Women Launch Campaign

In conjunction with the great international movement, "Today's Challenge to Catholic Womanhood," an active campaign will be launched here by local units of the Catholic Daughters of America.

The campaign, Nation-wide in scope, will get under way November 15, with prominent Catholic women taking leading roles.

Supreme Regent, Miss Mary C. Duffey, has issued a call for support of the movements known as the Real Youth Movement, Catholic Education, the National Converts League, Extension of Senior and Junior Circles and patriotic and community activities.

Puerto Rico Re-elects Iglesias to D. C. Post

San Juan, Puerto Rico, Nov. 4 (AP). Santiago Iglesias, who urged the necessity for Puerto Rico's continued association with the United States, was returned winner today in his campaign for re-election as Resident Commissioner at Washington.

A coalition of Socialists and Union Republicans again won overwhelming control of both legislative houses in yesterday's voting.

Dispatches from Ponce Tuesday night said two persons were killed and six wounded seriously in insular election disorders yesterday. Iglesias, himself, was slightly wounded by a Nationalist during a campaign speech October 26.
